Dining hall access limited

women can eat in McCormick... They are going to control who goes into their dining hall as far as males are concerned.

Anita Walton, Program Coordinator for Dining and Residence Programs, confirmed these statements. "If [McCormick Dining Hall] is open to all women on campus, where the dining hall is placed, there is a problem with security." When asked how McCormick's security problem differed from other dormitories with centrally located dining facilities, Walton said, "McCormick is a special case," because of its status as a women's dormitory on campus.

Another recommendation from last year's Report on Campus Dining have not yet been implemented. Plans for purchasing food items in bulk for all dining facilities have not yet materialized, primarily because adequate storage areas for large quantities of food do not now exist on campus. Both Hartwell and Walton said that bulk food buying will probably not go into effect until "Next House," with its proposed additional storage facilities, is completed.

Suggestions for a student food cooperative have also been dormant. Hartwell said, "Those have not been worked on this summer," and Walton both said that these proposals would be considered this fall.

Everyone will have a housing assignment by the Thursday before Registration Day.

This statement, generally overlooked and previously accepted as fact, proved false yesterday. Given the method used to estimate class size and the housing situation in Boston, it was inevitable that the system would eventually break down. For at least the past three years, the incoming class size has exceeded predictions, and as upperclassmen find it difficult to move off campus, the housing system has become increasingly overcrowded.

The first priority of the Deans' Office must be to remedy the unacceptable situation of the 32 displaced persons currently housed in Ashdown and the Non-Resident Students' Association, and to ensure the system has failed to place them.

The Deans' Office must next look to next year to be sure this year's unacceptable happenings become the exception and not the rule. MIT's luck with the success of its unorthodox housing assignment process may be close to running out. Unless all parties involved conduct a careful reassessment of their plans, this year's absurd 11th hour limbo dance may prove only the beginning of a long, tragic, jitterbug.

Overcrowding can not continue as it now stands.—The goal of this year's undergraduates moved into alleviating overcrowding and adding an increased class size on this plan can no longer be taken seriously.
