Three MIT athletes were chosen to compete in the 1988 Olympics: Jan Goldman '89 and Alecie Photisades '91 in the Winter Games, and Elizabeth Bradley G in the Summer Games.

Goldman broke another US record on the final day of the Games. She finished 10th in the women's 5000 meter speed skating event, which was won by China's Zhaoyi Lin in a time of 14:41.5.

Goldman, who studied physics at MIT, had hoped to become an astronaut, but decided to pursue a career in science. She later went on to study medicine.

The Beavers' defense led the way as the Beavers rebounded to a three-game winning streak against Assumption College and Providence College. They saved the day after offensive turnovers let the opposition back into games.
