IS Doubles Athena Storage Space; Quotas Now 10 MB

By Ramy A. Amaout
ASSOCIATE NEWS EDITOR

The Athena Computing Environment saw a sizable expansion earlier this month, as Information Systems doubled users' hard disk quota from 5 to 10 megabytes.

The increase, which did not interrupt service, is the latest in a series of yearly quota boosts. "Each summer for the past several years we've increased the default user quota," said Kimberly A. Carney, systems programmer with Distributed Computing and Network Services. "Last year it was increased from 2.2 MB to ... 5 MB," where it had remained until this month, she said.

However, systems administrators said that an increase is not expected next summer. "I can't predict whether there will be another increase next year," said Gregory A. Jackson, director of academic computing for IS. "At this point, with budgets growing increasingly tight, I rather doubt it," he said.

Despite this forecast, this summer's increase makes the MIT user quota among the highest in the country for a university. By comparison, the California Institute of Technology currently supports a quota of 5 MB, but has plans for an increase to 7 MB in the near future, said Caltech Computing Systems Manager Bob Logan. Harvard University, by contrast, accommodates only 0.2 MB per student, according to Edward Mortel of Harvard Educational Computing.

The move was widely approved by students who had come close to the previous 5 MB limit.

"What do I think of the increase? My quota went from 98 percent to 45 percent, and I think it's great," said Oleg E. Drozhinin '97. "More than half of my account was filled [with electronic] mail alone," he said.

Although the amount of disk quota used varies among students, students typically fall into two groups. "They either fit in between 0 and 15 percent or between 85 and 100 percent," Carney said. She expects the trend to continue: Students who had reached the old limit are soon likely to reach the new one, while students who rarely used their accounts before the increase are unlikely to feel the effects of the change.

User needs prompted increase

The decision to boost the quota was largely in response to students' needs for disk space, Carney said.

"The ability to incorporate pictures and graphics into documents is becoming commonplace," Carney

IFC Rush Rules Aim To Keep Rush Fair

By Daniel C. Stevenson
ASSOCIATE NEWS EDITOR

Independent living groups rush under a set of rules designed "to keep any fraternity or sorority from taking advantage over another other Greek society," said Mohan Gurunathan '97, a member of the Interfraternity Council Judicial Committee.

ILGs should make the freshmen available, and "their whereabouts should be known to everyone," Gurunathan said. "The worst violation is trying to hide a freshman."

The IFC rules are also designed to "protect the rushees during rush," according to the preamble of the IFC rush rules. The rules focus on maintaining communication with rushees at all times, allowing equal access by all ILGs, and providing safety to new students.

Last year, 10 ILGs were charged with rush violations, and over $3,000 in fines were collected.

Living groups are required to record when each freshman goes to sleep and when he or she wakes up.

This information, along with each's freshman's movements from living group to living group, is tracked by Clearinghouse. With this information, living groups can wait for freshmen and try to talk to them as soon as they wake up.

Some living groups will wake a freshman up earlier and take them to an activity, Gurunathan said, denying other groups the chance to talk to the freshman.

"Things like that are pretty blatant," Gurunathan said. "But it doesn't happen all that often."

SAE led '93 violations

Last year, the IFC collected nearly $3,000 in fines from ILGs for violations during rush. A total of 19 charges were brought against 11 living groups. Most of the violations were benign and dealt with matters such as improper message-handling and failure to comply with Clearinghouse procedures, Hijirida said.

Summer's Worth of Preparation Culminates in Freshman Rush

By Ifung Lu

From the words "Let the rush begin!" at the Killian Kick-off, incoming students have the chance to live life in the fast lane — with lots of free food, shiny clean houses, elaborate decorations, and hours of entertainment and partying. But behind the scenes, preparation for this week-long feeding frenzy is long and slow, starting as early as the spring.

Each group's rush chair oversees the planning and work for both rush week and summer rush activities.

Zeta Beta Tau's preparation included a retreat and seminar for its members, said Rush Chair Quoc L. Tran '95. By the beginning of the summer, plans start to take on more concrete forms, and some fraternities make reservations for their activities, Tran said.

Many living groups also publish rush books which are sent to the incoming students over the summer.

Tau Epsilon Phi's book took a little over three-and-a-half weeks, according to TEP Rush Chair Derek

E. Schulte '96. The book featured stories by several members of the fraternity.

Fraternities often try to meet as many freshmen as they can during the summer before the real rush begins, said Mihir Shah '96, a fraternity rush chair.

Work week precedes rush

With only one week left before the new freshmen and transfer students arrive, living groups take care of all the final details — everything from buying food to cleaning their house. For example, TEP's work week lasted eight to nine hours each day for about six days, Schulte said.

"We'll do everything from moving walls to cleaning bathrooms. You name it, and we'll do it," Schulte said.

"There are so many things to prepare for, such as a front desk, phone lines [for Clearinghouse], setting everything up," Shah said.

Interfraternity Council rules require all fraternities have a reception desk to greet freshmen, and to maintain at least three phone lines for Clearinghouse, the system used to keep track of rushees.

With everyone working to maintain a state of readiness, problems do occasionally occur. "We had a lot of logistical problems," said Tran. But good planning helps in handling unexpected circumstances.

The planning is done "so that everything goes smoothly and is more fun for the freshmen," Shah said.

This year's rush features an extensive list of activities, including sumo wrestling, lobster dinners, and cryogenic experiments with food. But it comes at a cost. According to Tran, ZBT's budget of near $5,000 is about the average for what fraternities spend.

"One of our goals this rush is to excite the freshmen about being at the Institute," Schulte said.

"The point of rush is to meet freshmen and to get to know them so they can find a fraternity that's appropriate to them," Shah said.

"We're pumped and ready," Schulte said.

Kenneth R. Wadleigh '43

Professor Emeritus Kenneth R. Wadleigh '43, former vice president and dean of the Graduate School, died July 21 at the MIT Infirmary following a brief illness. He was 73.

A memorial service will be held Sunday, Oct. 2 at 2 p.m. at the Friends' Meeting House, 5 Longfellow Pl., Cambridge.

Wadleigh served as a senior administrator at the Institute for more than 20 years. His contributions ranged from major expansion of the student residential system to development of the MIT Health Plan, a health maintenance organization that currently serves more than 8,000 members of the MIT community and their families.

As dean for student affairs from 1961 to 1969, Wadleigh helped establish the faculty resident program through which senior faculty members and their families live in undergraduate dormitories as house masters. This program works to enhance residential life as part of the overall educational experience. Wadleigh also oversaw the expansion of student extracurricular activities brought on by construction of what is today's Student Center.

After being named vice president in 1969, Wadleigh focused on carrying out special projects, including further development of the student residential system. In 1970, his responsibilities were expanded to include the Registrar's Office, repository of the Institute's permanent

Official U.S. Presence In Somalia Ends Sept. 15

THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON

The last official U.S. presence in Somalia will end Sept. 15, the Clinton administration announced Friday, after deciding the capital of Mogadishu has become too violent to allow 22 diplomats and 58 Marines there to remain safely.

The issue of whether to keep a small U.S. presence in Somalia has divided the administration for several months. Pentagon officials argued the tribal warfare had left Mogadishu so dangerous it was imprudent to stay. But the State Department worried that abandoning the country would send a message of retreat that might cause the end of the continuing U.N. relief effort.

Under pressure from Congress, the administration chose safety over symbolism. But State Department spokesman Michael McCurry said the United States would try to keep some leverage in Somalia by moving its liaison office to neighboring Kenya and having diplomats make regular visits. In addition, a $35 million annual aid program, including $12 million in food shipments, will be continued.

Jesse Jackson Considers Running for President in 1996

LOS ANGELES TIMES

WASHINGTON

"Sadly disappointed" with President's Clinton's performance in office, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said Friday that he is considering running for President in 1996 — either by challenging Clinton for the party's nomination or by running as an independent candidate.

By choosing either of these courses, Jackson could make Clinton's road back to the White House much rougher. If he contests Clinton for the Democratic nomination, Jackson's appeal to blacks and other liberal constituencies could force Clinton to pay more attention to the left. And this would be at a time when the "New Democrat" president would probably want to move to the center to answer Republican criticism that his policies are already far too liberal.

A bid by Jackson, who ran for president in 1984 and 1988, would threaten to divide the Democratic Party much as Pat Buchanan's challenge to President Bush in 1992 disrupted the GOP. And an independent Jackson candidacy might well siphon off the black votes Clinton needs to win a second term.

While Jackson said he would make no decision about 1996 until after November, he took a dim view of the "present direction" of the Clinton presidency, which he labled a "dream buster."

"Those of us who voted for racial equality and workers rights and economic stimulus and education equity as keys to reduce pain and hardship are sadly disappointed," he said. He said he was speaking on behalf of "the vast body of workers, blacks, hispanics and urban America" who helped elect Clinton in 1992.

U.S. to Pay $100K to Families of Foreigners Killed in Army Choppers

THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON

The United States will pay $100,000 to family members of each of the eleven foreigners who were killed last April when U.S. Air Force fighter jets mistakenly shot down two Army helicopters over Northern Iraq.

In a statement, the Pentagon said Defense Secretary William J. Perry was authorizing the payments as a humanitarian gesture, not because they were obligated under U.S. or international law.

A report issued by the Defense Department last month concluded the shooting down of two Army Black Hawk helicopters was caused by a long string of procedural blunders and communications breakdowns on the part of two F-15 jet pilots, the crew of a nearby airborne radar plane, and various officers in the chain of command.

Gerard Lear, a lawyer representing some of the foreign nationals, said the United States may have legal liability for their deaths, despite the Pentagon's claims to the contrary. He said establishing liability in the case of the U.S. deaths was a more difficult case, because of a legal principle known as the "Feres Doctrine," which generally protects the government from legal blame in the case of military deaths.

A State Department spokesman said Friday night it could not be immediately learned what death benefits would be received by the family of one of its officials, Barbara L. Schell, 50, the only U.S. civilian killed in the shootings.

U.S. Cutter Picks Up Cuban Rafters — 'Like Fireflies'

By William Booth
THE WASHINGTON POST

ABOARD THE USCGC BARANOF

As the sun breaks through the squalls, the concrete apartment blocks, smokestacks and harbor of the last communist foothold in the Western Hemisphere are suddenly as clear as a postcard.

"Confirm, confirm, that is Havana," said Lt. Gwen Keenan, captain of the Baranoff, and she dares not go much closer.

But the rafts keep coming.

This is the Florida Straits, the real world Tom Clancy novel of high-tech hide and seek, search and rescue. As record numbers of Cuban rafters pour into the seas, the Coast Guard and Navy are mounting one of the largest humanitarian sea rescues in modern times, dwarfing in personnel and equipment previous efforts to stem the flow of Haitian refugees. Ten large Navy warships are plying the waters between Key West and Cuba, along with at least 34 Coast Guard vessels, pulled from home ports from Maine to Texas.

"This is the most intense rescue operation in 50 years," said Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Jim Howe.

So great is the need that old Coast Guard buoy tenders, commissioned in the middle of the century, are now hunting for rafters. Sixteen cutters — almost half the Coast Guard's entire fleet of 110-foot cutters — are in the straits, severely limiting federal drug interdiction and rescue patrols across the eastern United States, according to Coast Guard officials.

On the Florida Straits these past two days, Coast Guard cutters picked up fewer rafters than earlier in the week. Tuesday's post-Mariel record breaker was 3,253 Cubans rescued. Thursday's count was 1,607. Friday as of 2 p.m. it was down to 378.

Coast Guard officers are not sure what is behind the dip in numbers, but they suspect bad weather and limited visibility are largely responsible.

"The Cubans may be eyeballing the weather and staying home, or we might not be finding them in this mess," said Joe Washburn, a quartermaster aboard the Baranoff, as he surveyed the horizon.

It is possible, however, some potential rafters are staying on shore as word spreads on the island that those rescued at sea will not get into the United States. The new Clinton policy demands all Cuban rafters be taken to the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Still, the number of rafters — more than 8,000 in the last four days — has set new records, and Coast Guard officials said their intelligence reported some fleeing Cubans have said they were recently "paroled" from prisons on 15-day passes and told to get out of Cuba or else.

If the early reports are true, it would be another act in the on-going dramatic replay of the boatlift from the Cuban port of Mariel in 1980, which brought 125,000 Cubans to Key West and weakened the presidency of Jimmy Carter.

During Mariel — when pleasure and fishing boats from Florida were allowed to dock and pick up those who wanted to leave — Cuban President Fidel Castro sent thousands of mental patients and criminals to the United States.

For two weeks, the waters of the Florida Straits, which run like a river with the Gulf Stream, have been flat and tranquil. That, and an open door posture by Castro, led to the outpouring.

But on Thursday storms battered the 90-mile-wide passage between Key West and Havana with rain squalls, lightning, 40-mph gusts and short, steep waves reaching eight feet-seas that could swallow the homemade rafts built of inner tubes, plastic bathtubs and surfboards.

"This ain't a pretty day to be a rafter," said Lt. j.g. Eric Gleason, second in command, as he stood on the flying bridge of the Baranoff, a 110-foot cutter out of Miami Beach. Squalls circled the boat, its bow buried in the incoming waves as its crew stumbled around below decks, lurching from side to side, a John Wayne movie playing on the video as the crew tried to eat lunch.

As did a dozen other cutters, the Baranoff kept sighting empty rafts for two days. Some may signal disaster, others rescue. The Coast Guard is now so busy it is no longer destroying or even marking the rafts from which it rescues Cubans, leaving the sea dotted with "empties" that are washing ashore along the Florida coast from Miami to Palm Beach.

Conservative Alliance Fails To Stop Passage of Crime Bill

By Helen Dewar
THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON

Seventeen months ago, Senate Republicans struck political gold when they signed a letter pledging to filibuster President Clinton's $16.3 billion economic stimulus package unless major changes were made. They stuck together, torpedoed the bill and handed Clinton his first big legislative defeat.

This week they tried the same strategy in fighting Clinton's $30.2 billion crime bill and hit dross. Conservatives overplayed their hand and forced a tiny but angry band of party moderates to the side of the Democrats, giving them — and Clinton — a big and badly needed come-from-behind victory.

Minority Leader Robert J. Dole, R-Kan., firmly allied with conservatives in the crime bill struggle, insisted the strategy will be vindicated when voters learn about the "ludicrous, ridiculous items" in the bill — a reference to what Democrats describe as crime prevention and Republicans call "social pork."

Dole reeled off programs that could include such activities as dancing classes and noted that one of these programs, aimed at helping high-crime communities improve drug treatment, jobs and education efforts, once had been in the 1993 economic stimulus bill.

As a leader of the Senate's increasingly aggressive conservatives and a prospective rival of Dole's for the 1996 GOP presidential nomination, Gramm has been nudging Dole to the right on issue after issue. On this one they were together. "It was election fever," said one Republican senator. "They saw 16 Democrats (senators) with less than 50 percent support and said this was the big chance."

But, after the vote, the anger in Dole's voice and the frown on his face suggested that things no longer looked so bright.

The defection of the seven moderates, who knew they were incurring the wrath of many colleagues in doing so, signaled that it may be harder to sell the GOP message on the crime bill than it was on the stimulus package.

The main difference is the not-so-thin blue line of police, prosecutors, corrections officials and other law enforcement officials who supported the crime bill, including prevention programs and the proposed ban on assault weapons used in street crimes, one of the GOP's other key targets in the bill.

Before jumping ship, Sen. James M. Jeffords, R-Vt., called key people back home in Vermont and the message he got, from law enforcement officials as well as those involved in prevention programs, was to vote for the bill, he said Friday.

Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., a former state attorney general, consulted his own experience and concluded: "What I liked most in this legislation was the prevention. What I liked most in this legislation was that which was so casually labeled pork." And, taking dead aim at many Republicans' derision of "midnight basketball" as emblematic of the social froth in the bill, Danforth asked, "What is wrong with basketball for kids" if it keeps them out of trouble?

But Dole's anger seemed to go deeper than arguments over the merits of the bill, reflecting what one colleague described as a sense of "betrayal" by his colleagues that caused him an embarrassing defeat.

Grousing that Majority Leader George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, appeared to be more persuasive than he was with some Republicans, Dole took note of the way in which House Republicans forced changes in the House-Senate conference agreement on the crime bill before it came to the Senate.

Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., who clearly does not enjoy breaking with her senior senator, friend and leader, held firm until the Democrats met her bottom-line demand for a vote on cutting out most of the prevention programs, which Dole and most other Republicans rejected as inadequate. The letter the Republicans had signed this week pledged them to toe the line "unless most of our concerns are resolved," and Kassebaum's were.

After voting against a key procedural move by Dole that could have killed the bill, Kassebaum sat stonily with a big circle of empty seats around her until Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., another defector, joined her in exile.

"Frosty" was the way Kassebaum later described the climate. "I think she was really suffering," said an aide to another Republican senator.

But it wasn't just the conservatives who were angry.

Sen. John H. Chafee, R-R.I., had signed the letter on the understanding that there would be no further efforts to kill the assault weapons ban. But when Republicans came up with an initial list of changes they wanted in the bill, it included an amendment to drop the ban.

Realizing they had overplayed their hands, conservatives backed off. But it was too late. Chafee was off the reservation.

Muslim Leaders Speak Against World Population Conference

By Kim Murphy
LOS ANGELES TIMES

CAIRO, EGYPT

In a dingy suite of offices rising above the human shouting, bird warbling and airborne feathers of a crowded poultry market, Essam Eryan, a physician and leading member of the Muslim Brotherhood, sits below a poster of an Earth ensnared by a giant octopus named the United States.

He has to raise his voice slightly to make himself heard.

"What is wrong with big families? My own opinion is: a big family is much better than a small family. It gives a very good chance to bring up children well, to give them a good education in traditions, to reduce selfishness," Eryan says.

"The responsible way to stop the population problem is to make development and create jobs. So we can welcome the newcomers, not kill them."

Egypt has 58 million people, and counts 1 million more every year. About 96 percent of its population is crammed onto the small sliver of green valley that straddles the River Nile. Poor families are stuffed into tenements that rise, bleak and sand-colored, toward a sky fouled by factory and auto emissions. Walking down a Cairo sidewalk is like pushing through a human sea.

Here, where the International Conference on Population and Development at Cairo's new conference center next month will attempt to set a global population strategy, a wave of Islamic resistance is mounting on issues of abortion, family relations and sex education that are likely to form some of the cornerstones of the new policy.

Muslim militants around the world are rallying to defeat such a program. They believe it is aimed at stemming the birth of new Muslims while leaving them impoverished, underdeveloped and unprepared to stand as equals in what many see as an impending contest of civilizations between East and West.

Even the restrained clerics of orthodox Islam have raised a voice of protest, arguing that many of the conference's frames of reference on family lifestyles, women's inheritance rights and abortion run counter to the teachings of the Koran.

Cairo's biweekly As-Shaab, the voice of the Labor Party and the Muslim Brotherhood, this week published a banner headline: "The Crimes of the Population Conference For the Genocide of Muslims and Oppressed Peoples."

Venerable Al-Azhar University, the seat of religious scholarship for the Muslim world, weighed in with a strongly worded condemnation of the conference's draft action program, which it said conflict with Islamic teachings on abortion, homosexuality and traditional family values.

Islam's response to the global population crisis will be crucial to any success in curbing human growth. Currently Muslims make up some 20 percent of the world's population, and birth rates, elevated in all Third World countries, are highest in Muslim nations.

Gunmen Fire on Spanish Tourists In Egypt, Killing Boy Instantly

By John Lancaster
THE WASHINGTON POST

CAIRO

Gunmen fired on a bus carrying 11 Spanish tourists in southern Egypt Friday, killing a 14-year-old boy and breaking a lull in anti-foreigner violence by Islamic militants seeking to topple the government of Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak.

The attack heightened security concerns surrounding the arrival here next month of 20,000 foreign dignitaries, activists and journalists for a U.N. conference on population and development. In recent weeks, government officials have been touting what they portrayed as a victory over Islamic extremists — a five-month period without attacks — and tourism had been showing signs of recovery.

Pablo Usan, 14, died instantly in the attack, which also wounded his father, another Spanish tourist and an Egyptian tour guide, according to Pablo Gevenois, charge d'affaires at the Spanish Embassy in Cairo. The tourists, traveling under police escort, were driving through a rural part of the Nile River valley about 280 miles south of Cairo to visit Pharaonic ruins. Usan was from Valencia.

The Spanish youth was the fifth tourist killed in attacks by Muslim extremists on tour buses, trains and Nile cruise boats that began in late 1992. The militants have used the attacks to bring pressure on the Egyptian government, which relies on tourism for jobs and hard currency.

The militants also have planted bombs outside Cairo banks, whose practice of charging interest they regard as contrary to Islam, and waged a violent campaign against police in southern Egypt that has claimed several hundred lives.

The government has cracked down harshly, hanging five militants in Cairo this week for a failed attempt to kill the interior minister. There had not been a lethal attack on a foreigner since March, when gunfire raked a cruise boat and killed a German woman. Attacks on police have diminished, and Cairo has been calm.

Last month, Interior Minister Hassan Alfie all but declared victory over the militants, telling reporters, "We have managed to encircle them and put an end to the acts of violence," according to news accounts.

Tourism Minister Mamdouh

Beltagui sounded a similar theme in an interview earlier this week, saying of the militant campaign that "it's over now" and refusing to entertain questions on the subject. Beltagui said the success of the government's efforts is borne out by tourism statistics for the month of July, which show a 12 percent increase in European visitors over the same period last year.

The Spanish tourists left the city of Luxor Friday morning by cruise boat, floated downriver for five hours to Qena, then boarded a bus for a 40-minute drive to Abydos, site of some of the oldest Pharaonic temples and burial sites in Egypt, according to a travel executive familiar with their itinerary.

Gunmen hiding in sugar cane fields opened fire on the Spaniards' vehicle as it passed near the village of Nag Hammadi at about 10:45 a.m., according to a brief statement from the Interior Ministry. The dead boy's father, Leopoldo, was wounded in the chest and the other Spanish tourist, Julio Ponce, was hit in the leg, according to the embassy account. The wounded victims were flown by helicopter to a hospital in the Cairo suburb of Maadi, according to the embassy.

Dow Jones Finishes Week on Rise, Awakes from Summer Slumber

By Brett D. Fromson
and Steven Pearlstein
THE WASHINGTON POST

The stock market has awakened from its summer slumber and pushed the Dow Jones industrial average up 126 points this week.

Many investment strategists are saying the economy is growing nicely with little inflation, and that should translate into a long period of good corporate profits.

Friday's 51-point rally in the Dow — on top of a 70-point gain on Wednesday — was sparked by another report indicating that the economic recovery is slowing to a more sustainable pace—one that is less likely to trigger inflation.

The Commerce Department report said the gross national product, the broadest measure of the economy's growth, increased at a 3.8 percent annual rate for the second quarter of the year, a number that was revised from the original estimate of 3.7 percent.

Investors had forecast an even higher rate. In the logic of the stock market, what seems to be good news—a roaring economy—actually can depress investments because of the inflation that can accompany fast growth. Inflation eats away at the future stream of profits, dividends and interest income to owners of capital.

So when the GDP figure came in at 3.8 percent Friday rather than a widely expected 4.1 percent, investors celebrated by buying. The Dow closed at 3881.05.

It was just such a mild deceleration in economic growth that the Federal Reserve had in mind last week, when it raised short-term interest rates by half a percentage point. When the Fed nudges short-term rates higher, the move tends to reassure investors that inflation will be forestalled in the long run and encourages them to lower the long-term rates they set each day on the Wall Street bond market.

"I think the Fed should be pretty happy right now," said David Wyss, an economist at DRI-McGraw Hill Inc. "We are seeing an economic slowdown that is very similar to soft landings in the past."

Some analysts, however, forecast a new downturn in the market before a pickup next year.

Thomas McManus, stock strategist at Morgan Stanley & Co., fears the recent interest rate hikes by the Fed will slow consumer demand in the short run. He looks for a better buying opportunity down the road.

Charles I. Clough Jr., chief investment strategist at Merrill Lynch & Co., shares McManus' concern that higher rates might nip consumer spending. But he says that slack demand should hit only some companies, not all.

Clough and other analysts now expect the economy's path will now permit the Fed to follow its political instincts and put off any further change in interest rates until after the November congressional elections.

Rwanda to Get Help From Stars, Advertising Agencies

NEWSDAY

A new multimedia public service campaign for the American Red Cross to raise money for Rwandan relief will break next week on TV and radio as well as in magazines and 5,000 movie theaters across the country.

The campaign represents an unprecedented effort by five major advertising agencies and two management and production companies. Together, they have formed the Crisis Coalition, dedicated solely to raising money for the cause. The ads will feature such celebrities as Jodie Foster, Richard Gere, Nicolas Cage, Edie Brickell and Vanessa Williams and will urge Americans to send aid to Rwanda.

A two- to three-minute ad produced by the coalition will run in 5,000 movie theaters and features a new song, "Don't Turn Away," sung by Richie Havens. The ad juxtaposes images of Americans living peaceful, routine lives with those of tragedy and pain in Rwanda. Another ad features the theme "There is no 911 in Rwanda."

Ad agencies participating in the coalition are Grey Advertising; Korey Kay & Partners; Messner, Vetere, Berger, McNamee, Schmetterer; Partners & Shevack; Wells Rich Greene BDDP; and commercial production and management companies D&H MacGuffin Films Ltd. and Brillstein/Grey.

Policeman Who Beat Rodney King Hired as Community Service Officer

LOS ANGELES TIMES

LOS ANGELES

Timothy E. Wind, the rookie police officer who repeatedly struck and kicked Rodney G. King in the videotaped beating that shook Los Angeles, has been hired as a community service officer by the Culver City Police Department, officials said Thursday.

Wind, who was fired by the Los Angeles Police Department after the 1991 beating but acquitted of criminal charges, will not carry a gun in his new position and is not considered a sworn peace officer, said officials in the city adjacent to Los Angeles.

Wind started work Tuesday on the 35-hour-a-week job, which D'Anjou said pays $9.32 an hour. Earlier this summer, Wind had sought reinstatement in the LAPD and had won a captain's recommendation that he be rehired. But that idea was quickly shot down by Chief Willie L. Williams.

Two of the four officers charged in the King beating were convicted. Laurence M. Powell and Stacey C. Koon were sentenced to 30 months each in federal prison — sentences that may be increased after an appeals court ruling last week. A third officer, Theodore J. Briseno, was acquitted in state and federal courts but was later fired from the police department. King filed a civil lawsuit and was awarded $3.8 million.

Student of War Graduates On Rwanda Battlefields

THE WASHINGTON POST

KIGALI, RWANDA

Paul Kagame, 37, Rwanda's vice president and defense minister, participated in a U.S. government program that brought officers from numerous countries to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., for military education.

But his studies at the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College were cut short in October 1990 when the Rwandan Patriotic Front launched its first offensive against a Hutu-led government in Rwanda.

Kagame's leadership this spring as commander of the Front won praise from military strategists.

"Kagame is an intellectual figure. I would rate him as a first-rate operational fighter," said Col. Jim McDonough, commander of American forces in Rwanda and a former director of the U.S. Army School for Advanced Military Studies. Kagame was born in Rwanda but, like thousands of Tutsis, fled with his family at an early age into neighboring Uganda after a Hutu revolt overthrew the Tutsi monarchy in 1959 and sent thousands of Tutsis into exile. Many of these same Tutsis, Kagame among them, were opposed to the oppressive regime of Ugandan dictator Milton Obote and joined the rebellion that brought Yoweri Museveni to power in that country in 1986.

THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON

With the Pentagon's relief mission in Rwanda and the refugee interdiction effort in the Caribbean, the Clinton administration has undertaken open-ended commitments costing millions of dollars a day without agreement on how to pay for them.

Administration officials and congressional sources this week described a scramble to calculate how much the operations actually cost and to identify sources of funding, as several agencies tried to fight off efforts to raid their budgets.

Congress has appropriated $50 million for refugee relief in Rwanda and another $170 million is pending in the fiscal 1995 defense appropriations bill. But $151 million had already been spent as of a week ago, administration officials said, and no end is in sight as refugees continue to flee Rwanda for camps in Zaire.

The fiscal picture is even murkier in the Caribbean. No funds have been made available for the massive campaign to intercept, transport, feed and house tens of thousands of Cubans and Haitians who have been sent to camps at the U.S. Naval Base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba.

Pentagon spokesman Dennis Boxx said this week that $230 million has been spent on the Haitian refugees alone in the current fiscal year. That figure is certain to grow rapidly because the number of Cubans at Guantanamo Bay already is nearly equal to the number of Haitians.

Total spending seems certain to rise into the billions of dollars because even if no more refugees are interned, those already at Guantanamo will have to be cared for until the governments in their home countries change.

Wadleigh Specialized In Fluid Dynamics

records, and the Medical Department.

In 1975 he became dean of the Graduate School as well.

Born in Passiac, NJ, in 1921, Wadleigh received SB and SM degrees in mechanical engineering from MIT in 1943. After serving in the U.S. Navy during World War II, he returned to the Institute as an instructor and was appointed assistant professor in 1949. In 1953 he received his ScD degree and the first Goodwin Medal honoring "conspicuously effective teaching" at MIT.

Wadleigh was known as a specialist in applied fluid dynamics and thermodynamics. He served as a visiting lecturer at Cambridge University in 1953-54. He returned to MIT as associate professor in 1954, was named professor in 1961, and retired in 1984.

In his retirement, Wadleigh had been active on several town boards in Swansea and was enjoying sailing.

Wadleigh is survived by his wife, Jeanne Stockbarger Wadleigh of Swansea; a daughter, Karen Wadleigh of Wilbraham, and two granddaughters.

Remembrances may be sent to MIT's Independent Residence Development Fund, c/o Treasurer's Office, 238 Main St., Suite 200, Cambridge 02142 or to the WGBH Educational Foundation, 125 Western Ave., Boston 02134.

Harald A.T.O. Reiche

Professor Emeritus Harald A.T.O. Reiche, 72, died on July 25. Services have already been held.

Reiche authored and co-authored several books and articles on classical history and thought. His main interest was Greek cosmology and astronomy, and he wrote and lectured widely on this subject.

In 1955 Reiche came to MIT when he was appointed assistant professor of classics and philosophy. In this position, he helped organize, design, and teach the introductory humanities program. He also taught electives in Greek philosophy and language, ancient history, and Roman political thought. He became associate professor in 1960, full professor in 1966, and retired in 1991.

Some former students probably best remember Reiche as house master of Baker House. He and his wife were the faculty residents from 1980 to 1990. They hosted Sunday evening suppers and symposia famous among students for good food and stimulating conversation.

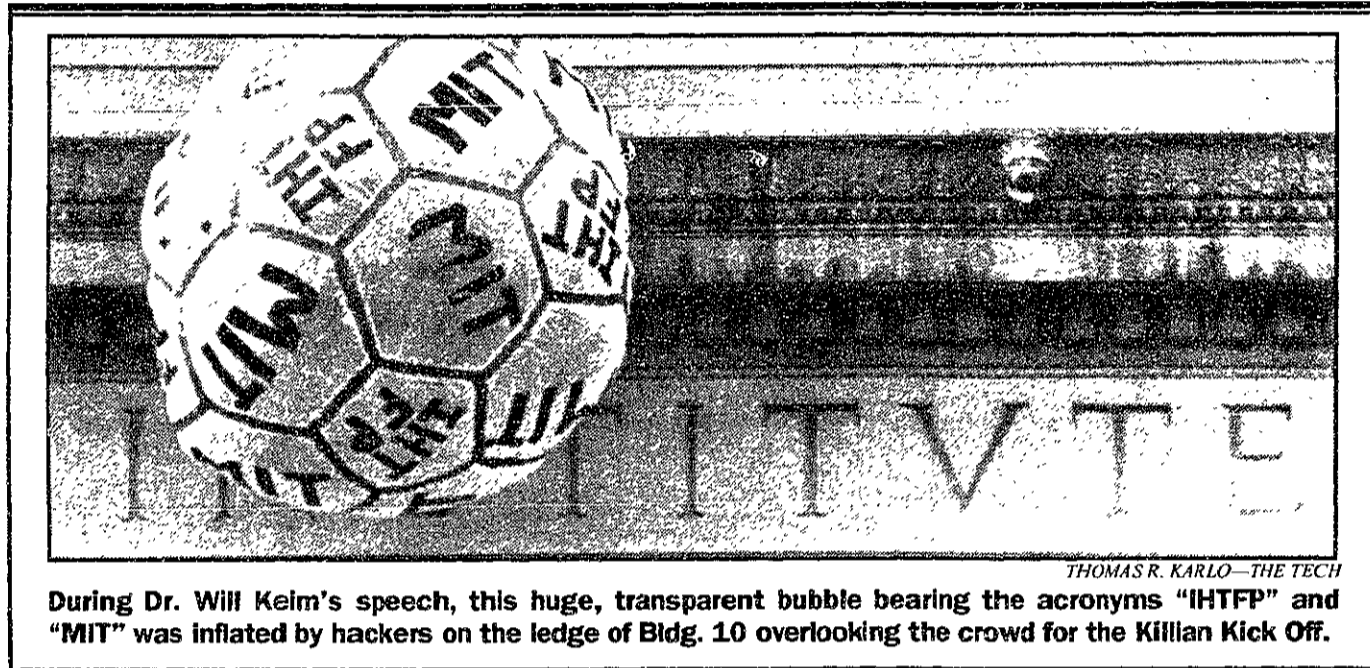

Born in Germany in 1922, Reiche studied in Switzerland before coming to the United States where he attended Phillips Academy. After serving in the U.S. Army during World War II, he received the AB degree in classics from Harvard University in 1943. He continued his education at Harvard and received an AM degree in 1944 and a PhD in 1955.

When he was first at MIT, Reiche held a Carnegie Fellowship in humanities. He later held a Guggenheim Fellowship in Athens and a Ford Foundation visiting professorship at the Technical University of Berlin. For many years he also lectured humanities and philosophy courses at Suffolk University.

Reiche is survived by his wife, Irene Vojenko Reiche of Boston; a son, Christopher Reiche of Arlington; three daughters, Elizabeth Riddle of Syracuse, NY, Katharine Bigel of Seattle, WA, and Victoria Reiche of Geneva, Switzerland, and three grandsons.

Remembrances may be made to the Baker House Fund, c/o Treasurer's Office, 238 Main St., Suite 200, Cambridge 02142.

Fraternities Fined over $3,000 For Rush Violations Last Year

ber of the ILGs, were charged against Sigma Alpha Epsilon, which was put on probation by the IFC two years ago. SAE was found guilty of three of the charges, and the probation was extended an additional year.

SAE was found guilty of rushing freshmen during the airport shuttle and not calling in to Clearinghouse overnight. It was also found guilty of violating a sanction placed on it by a 1992 IFC review board. The sanction required SAE to notify other fraternities before taking trips with freshmen being rushed by both houses. SAE also paid the most fines, $1,050.

"We expect a certain amount of fines ... but we try to run as clean a rush as possible," said SAE rush chair David M. Sukoff '95 in an interview last year. "We get fined a lot harder than any other house because of our reputation, because we are watched so closely," he said.

Alpha Delta Phi was found guilty on two of four charges, and fined a total of $400. The charges were bad-mouthing another living group and poor message-keeping.

Theta Xi was also found guilty of bad-mouthing and fined $250.

Zeta Psi was found guilty of not giving messages to freshmen and was fined $500. ZP was already on probation for the message violation, and "it was felt that this additional sanction was necessary to insure there was no chance of any calls to slip by Zeta Psi," according to a Judcomm report.

Delta Upsilon and Pi Lambda Phi were fined $50 and $100 respectively for failing to have three telephones operational at all times. DU and ZP were fined $100 for failing to have a staffed front desk between 7 a.m. and 12 a.m. Sigma Phi Epsilon was found guilty of the same charge and fined $50.

The following fraternities were charged but found not guilty: Alpha Tau Omega, Phi Gamma Delta, and Lambda Chi Alpha.

Common rush violations involve saying unfavorable comments, even by chance, about other living groups, Gurnathan said. "If you can't say anything favorable, it's wise not to say anything at all."

"A large number of the violations that happen are really unintentional because someone didn't understand the rules completely," Gurnathan said. "That doesn't mean it shouldn't be prosecuted."

"We have a lot of rules," said Judcomm Chair David H. Hijirida '94 in an interview last year. "It seems kind of picky, but they are there for a reason. Because of that you're almost always going to find rush violations."

Student investigators go around to different living groups throughout rush to check for violations. "They have assigned houses that they have to go to and check up on," Gurnathan said.

Many of the rush violations are hard to prosecute, Gurnathan said. To press charges, a living group or a rushee must make a complaint to an investigator.

A trial is held within a month of rush for most violations, Gurnathan said. "Judcomm is really busy, even for weeks after Rush." The final decisions are made by a review board composed of one elected representative from each living group.

The IFC levies fines on some living groups for rush infractions. Other living groups might be "put on probation and need to be continuously monitored," Gurnathan said.

New Athena System Software Released

said. "As a result, users are storing larger files and need additional disk quota, particularly for things like their theses."

Instead of installing 10 MB worth of disk space per student all at once — raising the total size to roughly 150 gigabytes — IS will make space available as users need it. As users start consuming more of their quota, additional disks will be deployed, Carney said.

"In thinking about quotas, we keep a close eye on four things: the pattern of used disk space, the cost of disk storage, our budgets, and the disk-storage implications of ... educational applications," Jackson said. "In general, the cost of disk storage has been going down, average disk use has been going up, our budgets have been steady, and disk-intensive applications are becoming more numerous. These indicators all suggested a quota increase, and we were able to manage it," he said.

Given the magnitude of increase, administrators are focusing on efficiency. "As the number of file servers in the Athena environment is increased, we need to make sure that other parts of the infrastructure" — notably, the disk backup system and monitoring software — "can handle ... the increased number of file servers and disk space," Carney said.

System software updated

Complementing the quota increase this month was IS's release of Athena 7.7. This latest version of the Athena operating system features software updates and numerous bug fixes, said Dorothy L. Bowe, Academic Computing Services faculty liaison. "As these upgrades go, it was relatively minor," she added.

Among the significant enhancements were general improvements made to the Sun Sparcstations' operating system, Solaris, and upgrades of popular packages like Tex/Latex and Framemaker, which are used in document preparation. Bowe said.

The software upgrades, some of which include substantial new features, should be the most noticeable changes to students, said Kevin Cunningham, senior technical writer for computing support services, in an IS briefing.

The release did not significantly affect dialup service, Bowe said. "The dialup is very different. It's something that gets fixed in a different cycle," she said.

As this year's Rush weekend began, upperclassmen grabbed freshmen to bring to tour their living group and meet the members.
