Ex-Sig Ep Brothers Stage Rush Protest

Former members pass out flyers, discuss eviction circumstances with freshmen

By Rima Amaout

Former members of Sigma Phi Epsilon evicted in an alcohol incident last year protested Sig Ep rush yesterday.

"They're being nice about it," said current Sig Ep rush chair Andrew W. Garza '02. "They're upset at the way the Alumni Board went through with kicking out people," he said.

The campaign consists of several former members of Sig Ep standing in front of the fraternity house handing out flyers and explaining the events which led up to the eviction.

In November of 1998, seven MIT Sig Ep freshmen and four upperclassmen on a pledge trip to MIT caught with a keg of beer. When MIT's chapter refused to kick out the people directly involved in the alcohol incident, the fraternity's Alumni Board conducted a series of interviews which eventually led to the eviction of 28 Sig Ep members.

Tony B. Avila '00, a former rush chair for Sig Ep, explained what the protesters would say to freshmen coming by the Sig Ep house: "I just want you to know what happened. If you read this flyer and still want to rush, by all means go ahead. But the system run by Shaun Meredith [the Alumni Board president] is malicious and we'd hate for this to happen to you."

MIT Coop, Others Offer Variety In Textbook Purchasing Options

By Sarah J. Elice

This article is the third in a continuing series aimed at helping freshmen adjust to daily life at the Institute.

This year the MIT Coop, most students' first thought for textbook purchases, has changed some of its policies in an attempt to become more competitive. The Coop does not hold a monopoly on textbook sales, however, and numerous other options exist.

The Coop has instituted a low-cost-price-available guarantee program this year. To take advantage of this program, a student must bring in proof of a lower price, either from a store's catalog or from a printout of a quote from an online book seller. Students should note that the matched price for an online book price will also include the shipping and handling charge.

Also, unlike in past years, when returns had to be made within the first two weeks of class, the return period has been extended until September 30th. If books were bought before receipts reflected this change, the receipt will still be honored through this return period.

Christopher S. Colbert, general manager of the Coop, added that if a student needs to drop a class, books can be returned with a receipt and proof of a drop through drop date.

Colbert also said that the Coop offers "a buy-back program in the store every day and that's a good way to reduce the cost of buying textbooks." He added that students don't take advantage of the program as the Coop would like.

In addition, depending on availability, one can often find both used as well as new books at the Coop. For example, Hartley Rogers' Multivariable Calculus with Vector, the textbook for Calculus (18.022), costs $79.95 new and $60.00 used. Those looking to purchase used books at the Coop should buy them early in order to find books in good condition.

During the first week of classes, the Coop will be open extended hours, until 7:30 p.m., and will be open Labor Day, Sept. 6, from noon to 5 p.m.

Other local options

There are several other local options for buying books. Students looking for only new books should explore Quantum Books, which has an online book store every day and that's a good way to reduce the cost of buying textbooks. Sex Matters' Changes Freshman's Viewpoints

By Aurora Schmidt

In the wee hours of the morning, I, the gullible freshman that I am, woke up extra early for a mysteriously mandatory breakfast yesterday followed by a presentation by renowned speaker Jay Friedman. A popular Seattle "sexpert," Friedman has been nominated as the best college lecturer of the year. He received a degree in education from the University of Vermont and has published the book How To Be A Better Lover.

I entered Kresge Auditorium expecting "Sex Matters" to be yet another boring sex talk, complete with redundant information, cheesy slogans, and scare tactics. Little did I know that the presentation would actually challenge my sexual point of view.

Friedman began by retelling a seemingly seductive story of an intimate relationship was between a mother and infant. Laughing at the sea of embarrassed faces he jokily asked, "What were you all thinking about?"

That was just the first of many intellectual leaps Friedman challenged us to take.

"This lecture will become increasingly more provocative as the hour goes by," he warned. "My goal is to turn you into sexperts."

He was right. Friedman's presentation was, to say the least, a bit provocative. In fact, I even found it informative.

Friedman delved into the psychological mess of the male adolescent and blamed societal pressures for widespread ignorance about sex.

He bravely put his own masculinity on the line, and he invited the jocks in the crowd to call him a "sissy," "fag," and "wuss" for his honest expression of his enjoyment of the sensitive side of his relationships. The invitation cleverly demonstrated the societal taboos that prevent men from revealing their true feelings.

"We use alcohol as a social lubricant," he said, touching on the link between sex and alcohol. Nonetheless, Friedman managed to avoid sounding as preachy as nearly all the other sex educators I've ever heard before.

He did, however, express his very strong liberal viewpoints con-

After more than 33 years of tough prison sentences, the last of the people of East Timor will go to the polls Monday to decide whether their country should become an independent nation or remain a province of Indonesia.

Most political analysts believe that East Timor, a former Portuguese colony now ruled by a military junta in Indonesia, will vote overwhelmingly for independence. The Indonesian-style presidential election will be held in January and offer East Timor independence or association with Indonesia.

A total of 86,000 people have been deported from their homeland, the United Nations has said.

Leaders of the opposing militias met twice with U.N. and Indonesian officials last week to discuss the timing for elections, and Indonesia was expected to announce a date for the polls Monday.

"There was an atmosphere of genuine goodwill," a U.N. official said. "But there is a disconnect between the politicians on the ground. The militias don't have a real command structure. They are not consistent about what military groups want."
Mexico Opposition Hoping To Stand United against the PRI

Opinion Policy

Editorials are the official opinion of The Tech. They are written by the editorial board, which consists of the chairman, editor in chief, managing editor, news editors, and opinion editors.

Disagreements are the opinions of the signed members of the editorial board choosing to publish their disagreement with the editorial.

Columns and editorial cartoons are written by individuals and represent the opinion of the author, not necessarily that of the newspaper.

Letters to the editor are welcome. Electronic submissions are encouraged and may be sent to letters@the-tech.mit.edu. Hard copy submissions may be addressed to Letters Editor, The Tech, 570 Massachusetts Avenue, Suite 200, Cambridge, MA 02139-7029, or sent by interdepartmental mail to Room W20-483. All submissions are due by 4:30 p.m. two days before the date of publication.

Letters and cartoons must be the authors' signatures, addresses, and phone numbers. Unsigned letters will not be accepted. No letter or cartoon will be printed anonymously without the express prior approval of The Tech. The Tech reserves the right to edit or condense letters; shorter letters will be given higher priority. Once submitted, all letters become property of The Tech, and will not be returned. In between his Florida vacation in the middle of a budget crisis and the revolving door of scandal and backstairs in Beacon Hill’s Corner Office, Governor Cellucci has managed to do one thing right this month. When one of two new vehicles produced to drive right through the SUV loophole.

Students cannot fail to realize how far out of step their acquired thinking on such matters is when they return home for breaks and vacations. Perhaps there are some few exceptions, but for the most part nowhere off campus students understand anything about the playful geek culture we so willingly embrace. Particularly skeptical students might even begin to scratch their heads slightly at the idea that anybody not of MIT consciousness, particularly a Dilbert, an icon that seems so representative of geeks in general.

Geeks are defined out of the mainstream as far as pop-culture goes, although varying degrees of geekiness are, at varying times, quite fashionable indeed. The ascendance of the personal computer has raised the status of geeks considerably - geeks are now highly visible and society’s dependence on them is transparent. Techophobes are at the mercy of geeks, and they know it.

So we now have an interesting sort of equilibrium whereby Joe Blow simultaneously raves and fears, is baffled by and depends upon, Ben Bitdiddle and Alyssa P. Hacker. We do not yet have a situation where MIT is held up as a model of higher education by parents’ associations who colloquially refer to us as a bunch of nerds. MIT, by its definition, is a model of higher education. It is a model of higher education because it is the only place where the students are the intellectual majority. If you change this, the school ceases to be MIT.

The expansion of Campus Preview Weekend to include all students last year means that Killian Kickoff was not the first exposure to residences for many freshmen. Freshmen said that CPW was helpful but not decisive in making residence decisions. ‘Katherine Jenkins ’03 said that “a lot of freshmen really hated where they lived” and eliminated that choice. “Everything else is left over,” however.

CPW was more helpful for Ken Terao ’03, who said that the type of parties that houses threw over CPW helped him to determine their personalities. He has narrowed his choice down to three or four living options “but didn’t want to limit” himself during rush.

IFC Rush Chair Ranjit S. Survanshi ’00 said that CPW likely only provided useful information about one residence: the living group which hosted the freshman.

Speeches precede rush
Following the mingling, Dormcon President Jennifer A. Frank ’00 addressed the new class. Frank encouraged freshmen to take advantage of the “awesome responsibility” given them to visit a few FSILGs but not to forget the dormitory system.

Sarah G. Gensheimer ’00, president of the women’s conference, spoke briefly to encourage women to attend the women’s convocation immediately following the kickoff.

Ranjit S. Survanshi ’00, Interfraternity Council Rush Chair, told freshmen that “residence selection is a misnomer... focus on the people, not the place.” Survanshi closed his speech with the traditional call to “let the rush begin.”

Groups were then free to approach freshmen in full lettered regalia and to erect signs on the southern border of the Court.

Dude.

Howdy.

You know, I feel like I know you already.

You know, I feel the same way.

Hey - there's a party tonight. You interested?

Sorry man, I've got a few calls to make.

The Crass Rat

Then if you...

It's a hostile takeover of my presentation!

...you'll see a pattern...

And you let him do it?

He had a laser pointer the size of your head.

Poor, unemployed dad.

Poor, poor unemployed dad.

Poor, poor, poor, poor, poor, poor, poor, poor, poor.

Jason, will you knock it off? I quit my job on purpose. I don't need your pity!

Pity? I'm just talking finances.

Remind me again why I wanted to spend more time with my family...

MedComm Resolves Rules Disputes During Orientation

By Karen Robinson

During Orientation, all living groups are governed by a set of regulations known collectively as rush rules. The often complex rules must apply to both FSILG and dormitories, and the opposing interests of the two groups are sometimes in an annual source of friction.

This year, a combination of judicial committees from the Dormitory Council and the Interfraternity Council met during the summer to address any problems that could arise during rush, said DomCor president Jennifer A. Frank. "This group, called the Mediation Committee, was formed before last year's residence midway. MedComm consists of three officers from DomCor and three officers from the IFC president, rush chair, and JudComm chair.

"This year, we have been adhering to IFC rules" for some events, such as for Killian Kickoff and the Residence Midway, Frank said.

Before Killian Kickoff, neither dormitory residents nor FSILG members were allowed to volunteer freshmen information about where they lived, but both DomCor and the IFC allowed members to answer direct questions from freshmen.

Residence midway

At the residence midway last year, the IFC had a rule that no display could exceed eight feet in height. DomCor, however, did not have this rule, and many dorms did not heed the IFC's requests that they take down tall displays. This year MedComm agreed that both groups would abide by this limit.

Other rules this year concerned how many living groups would be present at any given负荷, and what could be at the booths, said Dan G. Collared. "If two different electronic reminders were used, for example, "because we didn't want people to choose where to live based on the different reminders," Collared said.

Killian kickoff

New rules for Killian Kickoff this year — mainly the "mingleurs" stationed in buildings three and four — made Killian Kickoff much more relaxed, said DomCor Rush Chair Gabriel M. Rockefeller '00.

Mingleurs or FSILG was allowed to bring 16 people to mingle with the freshmen and as many people as they wanted to carry the one living group sign. The mingleurs were split into two groups to enter Killian from building 3 and one to enter from building 4.

Mingleurs then sat with freshmen in Killian Court to listen to rush speeches. Only when IFC Rush Chair Ranjit S. Satsavali '00 said, "In the rush begin" could they display living group freshmen and initiate conversations with freshmen about living arrangements.

Sorority rules

Some of the strictest rules on campus are those followed by sorority members.

According to Jenny Jaung '00, this year's Panhellen Rush Chair, many rules are determined by the National Panhellenic Council. The speaking rules are specific to MIT, however, because of "our Panheli situation," Jaung said. Sisters may begin speaking openly to freshmen outside of formal rush hours beginning September 1st at 3 p.m. Jaung said.

"Not all the sororities have houses here yet — most of the sororities live in dorms, so we try to make it as fair as possible," freshmen are allowed to choose to visit the houses on a designated day, but most rushing is done in the Student Center, she said.

Before Killian Kickoff rushing was prohibited, by both the IFC and DomCor. Upperclassmen were permitted to answer if asked by a freshman which dorm they lived in or whether they liked it, but were not allowed to volunteer this information.

Reorganized Sig Ep Attempts To Change Party House Image

"I don't think this is an ugly incident from the past that can now be overlooked," said John Dunagan '00, a Sig Ep alumnus who drafted the flyer and was stationed outside of Sig Ep. "It reflects poorly on the whole wants people to be more informed about fraternities and the system, and we're trying to help," Avila said.

The current members say that the current members stress that there is no bad blood between them. "We're not too happy about the events that led to last year's mass evacuation," said Jonathan C. Bates '00. "They have to understand that this could happen again."

The current members say that the past incidents don't matter because Sig Ep is not the same place any more. Current Sig Ep President Michael G. McCarthy '02 said that the reorganization but also reorganization of a leader, scholar, and gentleman," McCarthy said.

"I am concerned that any freshman joining the fraternity would be putting his academics at MIT at risk," Dunagan said.

Friedman Praises Pornography

Friedman praised pornography. Some mature people use pornography responsibly and it even drives new technology, he argued.

Friedman portrayed conservative views against pornography as an infringement on our freedoms. In doing so, however, he characterized the right wing as being opposed to all expressions of sexuality. His open-minded views should have been extended to the religious conservatives that he criticized.

Friedman also addressed homophobia as being a societal pressure, although he did not explore the subject in depth. As Daniel J. Katz '03, said "I was disappointed with the orientation of the program to homosexuals. While I'm straight, I realize that there's a large gay community that needs to be represented."

Friedman's presentation was effective in undermining revered social stigmas. He drove the point home with the insight, "It's not our fault that we are socialized this way, but it's our fault if we don't change."

I came away with a perspective that, even though not changed, has been expanded. To quote Friedman, "We learn most when we're challenged by new and different ideas."
