HE Hall of Fame, towards the instituting of which Miss Helen Gould of New York has given $100,000, is a form of memorial to famous Americans which is unparalleled on this side of the Atlantic. The United States has no building to be compared with the Westminster Abbey of England or the Pantheon of Paris, and the creating of this Hall of Fame is a movement, while not exactly on parallel lines with the former two, is significant of the growth of the country. Naturally the choosing of the judges who will act on the names submitted for such commemoration is a task at once difficult and important. The chairman of the committee of judges is President Eliot of Harvard, and the remaining judges, of which there are one hundred in all, are taken from the large colleges of the country. Professors C. F. A. Currier and G. F. Swain have been chosen to act as judges, and their acceptance of the offices is a cause of congratulation both to them and to the Institute.

In the column of communications, THE TECH prints a letter from the Chairman of the Advisory Council on Athletics. It is well understood that the Council's recent action in regard to class baseball was purely as advice, and not in the least imperative or final. The question whether or not class baseball will be abolished is for the classes themselves to decide. It is a fact, and one which could not well be otherwise, that in the baseball field Technology can never hope to put herself on an equality with other colleges. The facilities, which the smallest of our competitors have, are, and it would seem from the nature of our work and life, always will be, greater than our own. Whether the existence of class baseball teams is to any great extent disadvantageous for Tech.'s track teams, is a hard question to decide. The Advisory Council, which certainly should be an authority upon the matter, thinks it is, and the opinion which is taken from the broad standpoint of Tech.'s athletic interest as a whole, should receive the closest consideration. One fact seems evident, however: the majority of the men who go into class baseball would not otherwise enter athletics; they go into baseball for the pleasure there is in the game itself. That there is considerable class interest in baseball among the lower classes is also evident from the attendance and excitement that are usually present at the annual Freshman-Sophomore baseball game. It is to be hoped that all sides of the case will be carefully examined, and that a result will be attained which will be for the benefit of Tech.'s interest from the broadest point of view. The Tech will be pleased to publish communications from undergraduates and graduates on this subject.

It is unfortunate, to say the least, that the international games with Oxford and Cambridge are going to be abandoned simply because Harvard and Yale persist in disagreeing as to the place where they should be held. International contests in all branches of sport have been growing into such prominence and have absorbed so much interest, not only of the colleges, but of the general public on both sides of the water that it does seem as though the petty jealousies of rival colleges ought to be suppressed for a short period and that they should make common cause in welcoming to the United States the English athletes who treated the Americans so handsomely last year.

Technique Electoral Committee.

The election of the 1902 Technique Electoral Committee was held in Roger's Corridor on April 17th, and the committee elected consists as follows: I. R. Adams, A. W. Allyn, D. M. Belcher, H. O. Bosworth, M. Brodie, R. V. Brown, L. S. Cates, H. Y. Currey, W. H. Farmer, A. W. Friend, Y. C. Fruit, F. Gannett, P. Hansen, C. W. Kellogg, Jr., K. Lockett, A. E. Lombard, C. E. McCarthy, R. B. Pendergast, H. B. Pond, R. Proctor, Jr., C. A. Sawyer, Jr., H. H. Saylor, G. T. Seabury, W. H. Simpson, K. T. Stow. Messrs. Allyn and Gannett were tied for twenty-fifth place. A meeting of the Committee is called by the president of the class, who acts as chairman until one is elected by the Committee. The Committee then proceeds to form by-laws, and nominations are received and voted on by the Committee, the Technique board, with the exception of Editor-in-Chief and the three artistic editors being elected in this way. A competition for the artistic staff is opened by the Committee to any member of the Sophomore class. The Editor-in-Chief is chosen by the board. The first meeting of the Committee was called for on April 25th. All particulars of the actions of the Committee will be given in full in The Tech for next week. It is expected that the nominations will be numerous, as they certainly ought to be.

Next Week.

The Tech for next week will contain, besides the regular features, full particulars of all the events of Junior week, including the Musical Club's concert and dance, the Junior Reception and "Prom," the Walker Club Play, and The Tech Tea. Besides these features will be cuts of the cast of "The Miser." A half-tone reproduction of the Musical Clubs of this year will also be given. A special cover design of exceptional value in two colors will complete the attractions of the souvenir Tech of Junior Week, 1900.

Changes in The Tech Board.

On account of his severe illness, Mr. Saylor has resigned from the position of Assistant Editor-in-Chief of The Tech, remaining, however, on the board. Mr. C. A. Sawyer, Jr., has been elected to fill the office.
The Story of Pablo, the Innkeeper.

The night had fallen when we drove into the courtyard of the inn, tired, hot and dusty, but a well-cooked dinner and a bottle of wine soon made me forget my fatigue. I found that Pablo, the innkeeper, spoke English, and as we sat smoking beneath a grape arbor behind the inn, he gave me a description of the town and its surroundings. "By the way," I said, as the conversation lagged, "do you happen to know anything about the old man and his strange daughter who came up from Los Angeles with me?" "Si, si, senor," he replied, "its a long and sad story, but, if the senor will have the patience to listen, I will tell all I know about it.

"About fifteen years ago, there came one evening into Santa Barbara a young man who claimed to be from old Castile. He was well received and, being out of money, found employment as foreman of the Rancho de Los Guanos, owned by wealthy Don Romero, the old man of the stage coach. Mercedes, his daughter, was at that time about nineteen years of age and as beautiful a girl as could be found in all California. It soon became known that Juan Guieterez, the young foreman, was deeply in love with Mercedes, and before the end of that spring their engagement was announced.

"One fine evening in May I was coming down the Mission Canon and had stopped for a moment beneath the great sycamore which rises like a sentinel outside the garden walls of the Mission. As I stood there, I heard a voice in the holy garden, which I recognized to be that of a young priest by the name of Fernandez; these were the words which came to my ear on that calm night in May. 'Father in Heaven above, who knoweth that I am a God-fearing and holy man, listen to my prayer and tell me why I, one of your most humble and obedient servants, am prevented from doing a deed of mercy which would save a girl from marrying a scoundrel, aye, the girl whom I love with madness even though a priest, yet must listen to the confessions of her lover and not speak a word of warning to her. My God, why art thou so unjust? Hast thou, in all thy power, no mercy? Answer and ease my pain or by—oh! forgiveness, dear Lord, what have I said, help me, dear Father.' This impassioned prayer ended in a sob, a gate clanged, the footsteps died away in the distance and all that could be heard was the rustling of the treetops and the far-away bark of a coyote.

"It flashed across me at once that Fernandez referred to Guieterez and Mercedes, and I sat for the moment dumbfounded. At first I thought of repeating what I had overheard to Don Romero, but, on further reflection, decided not to do so; he would laugh at my seemingly-wild story and, after all, Fernandez might possibly be mistaken.

"A month passed and at last came the night of the wedding. The Mission Church was filled to overflowing, and soon from the choir loft came stirring strains of the wedding march. The ceremony was half through when, of a sudden, there were heard these words; 'In the name of God, the Father Almighty, stop!' and from the desk where he had been sitting stepped Fernandez, his face pale and his dark-brown eyes shining brightly. Not a sound could be heard, no one hardly dared breathe. Then, with a voice full of feeling, Fernandez spoke: 'Know ye, my children, that if God had not given me strength to speak, a murderer would have been married to this beautiful girl, a crime as great as the one I am about to commit, for I now betray to you the confession of Pedro Guieterez, made to me on the twelfth of April last. On the night of the great mountain fire last Autumn, this man murdered Manuel Pasqualez, the old Indian who lived in the Santa Ynez Valley, and stole from him all the money he had stored away. You all remember how a starving half-breed was arrested and hanged for the crime and that Guieterez was one of his most ardent prosecutors. And now that I have broken the Law of Confessions, I care not if you torture me to death, for I have done my duty to God; in the name of Jesus Christ, the Father Almighty, Amen.' He folded his arms and with a firm step walked back to his desk. Then followed a scene of great commotion; Mercedes had fainted and fallen on the stone steps of the altar and a tiny stream of blood trickled from her forehead over her maiden white gown. Fernandez saw this and started towards her, but was held back by two priests and led away to the cloisters. Guieterez broke down completely and gave himself up to the constable without a sign of resistance.

"The people departed one by one and soon I was alone in the church. I sat in one corner, drowsily thinking over the day's events, and soon, either on account of the wine I had drunk at Don Romero's or the heavy clouds of incense which still filled the church, I fell asleep. Suddenly I awoke, bewildered at first at my strange surroundings; then all at once I caught the sound of a dismal chant, now rising, now falling, but slowly approaching. You cannot imagine the weirdness of it all, that dark and lonely church, with one solitary light burning dimly over the altar, and the far-away chanting of the priests. Now a light appeared in a doorway at the other end of the church and a friar bearing a candelabrum entered; following him was the Father Superior, dressed in his robe of white and gold, then came all the priests and friars of the Mission in a long and solemn procession. In the midst of them was Fernandez, stripped of his priest's gown and wearing a cloak of sackcloth. His head was bowed, but, even from where I sat, I could see the same brightness in his eyes that I had noticed before. They passed across the chancel and entered the Holy Garden. I could not resist the temptation, so followed far behind them, crouched behind a clump of bamboo, and, parting the stalks, could observe all that was going on. The door of one of the bell towers was opened, Fernandez stepped inside and knelt in prayer. The Father Superior opened a Bible and read a few verses, then in a low voice offered up a prayer, a long appeal to the Almighty to have pity on his fallen child. When he had finished, two friars stepped forward and by the dim light of the candles I saw that each carried a trowel and a bucket of mortar and that close by the tower was a pile of bricks. Then for the first time the awful truth flashed across me; they were going to bury this poor fellow alive for having betrayed the secrets of the confessional. Slowly, but surely, the friars bricked up the doorway; not a sound could be heard save the click, click of the trowels until suddenly Fernandez, who had kept perfectly quiet heretofore, hurled himself against the wall with a despairing shriek, my God! what a shriek — and then all was still. The friars commenced their work again and' — Here the worthy wife of Pablo came out from the inn and informed him that the stage had just arrived from Los Olivos, so I had to leave with his story unfinished.

Communications.

The Editors do not hold themselves responsible for opinions expressed by Correspondents.

EDITOR TECH, DEAR SIR: —

Referring to the motion which was passed regarding class baseball, I would say that probably through some error in legibility of handwriting, the vote as given you was not quite the same as that recorded. The motion was "that it is the wish of the Council, etc." The Advisory Council have not any desire to even appear arbitrary or imperative in any of their transactions. It is believed, however, by the Council that there is no question but the interest of athletics will be better served by giving up base-ball, as there is practically no opportunity to compete with teams which should be really "foemen worthy of our steel," and the base-ball season is one which, except in the case of an exceptional spring like the present, cannot be played in this climate to advantage until after the middle of May, at which time the continuance would interfere seriously with the studies. I have noted that the class of competing teams which have been selected are the High School teams and private school teams composed of youths one to two years younger than the M. I. T. Freshmen, and at Tufts, for instance, the second nine play with such schools.

Further than this, every year for the past two or three years, since I have followed athletics more closely at the Institute, there have been one or more men who have played base-ball who would have helped track athletics, and been participants, but outside of this I believe that the respect of the outside world for the Institute from an athletic standpoint is not increased by playing even class base-ball with our local preparatory schools, and certainly the two Phillips Academies are as far down the scale as it seems to me we should go.

I do not mean to derogate the base-ball nines of local preparatory schools, but on the other hand, the Institute men should play colleges, and not with youths of two or three years their junior.

I did not mean to write you so much at length on this subject, but it may serve to give you a very few of the arguments which the Advisory Council considered in passing the vote which they did.

Yours truly,

FRANK H. BRIGGS,
Chairman Advisory Council.

Stanley Howland, '97, has been in the U. S. Army for the last two years and is at present commander Co. E., 24th U. S. Infantry, and stationed at San Yose in the northern part of the Island of Luzon. He entered the Army as 2nd Lieutenant in 1898, during the Spanish War, and was promoted to the first Lieutenancy in June, 1899. He arrived at Manila with his command, in July last year.

Capt. Bordman.

General R. P. Hughes, the reviewing authority of the Bordman - MacDonald court martial, the particulars of which were given by The Tech a few weeks ago, has disapproved of the finding in the Bordman case and the sentence of the court in the MacDonald case. Grounding judgment on the testimony, the decision of the two courts, for that which tried Capt. MacDonald differed in the addition of four new members from the one which tried Capt. Bordman, was little less than a farce. Each officer has been ordered to resume his sword and to return to his command.

The announcement is made that H. P. MacDonald, '01, has resigned from the vice-presidency of the Football Association. In commenting upon this it seems suitable for us to say that such an action, especially in the case of a man who has been a prominent player on our 'varsity elevens, is highly unfortunate and forms a precedent most improper to set before the Institute at large.

1902, 4 — Dean Academy, 1.

Saturday, April 21st, the Sophomores defeated Dean Academy at Franklin by a score of 4 to 1. The game was well played from start to finish, and although there were but few plays of a brilliant nature, the fielding of both sides was fast and clean. 1902 was at times very weak at the bat, leaving a number of men on the bases, through inability to land on the ball safely at critical times. Foote pitched his initial game for the Sophomores and proved very effective, letting but four men hit safely, besides giving no bases on balls. Capt. Pond caught a most creditable game, allowing but two men to steal second. He led also at the bat with a three base hit. The following men played: Pond, c., Foote, p., Gannett, 1st., Sawyer, 2nd., Patch, s.s., Chapman, 3rd., Fish, l., Franklin, m., and Gardiner, r.

1903, 2 — St. Marks, 23.

The Freshmen met defeat, Wednesday, April 18th, at the hands of the St. Marks team. A rainy morning left the grounds in wretched condition, so that before the game was half over, the base lines were covered to the depth of two or three inches with a slippery mud, which made the footing most uncertain and accurate and consistent playing an impossibility. 1903, however, was lamentably weak at the bat, and inexcusable errors were made by some of the infielders. The following men played: Nettleton, 2nd., Winchester, p., Foster, 1., Langley and Pembroke, c., Mears, 1st., Grice, m., Cheney, 3rd, Gray, ss., and Allen, r.

As one of the events of the week, The Lounger takes it upon himself to evolve a reflection or two on a recent publication of the Junior Class and for once he removes his gaze from the M. I. T. A. A. bulletin opposite him and imagines the photograph above a Technique poster. This publication has been multifariously advertised but up to last week, when, "due to the courtesy of the Technique Board," The Tech was able to advertise it a little further, the purposes and contents of the volume had been very completely closed to the public. The Lounger has discovered that the book contains a poem, if it is permissible so to call it, by a graduate of '87, and as this has been styled the "true battle cry" of Technology, The Lounger cannot forbear from making a comparison between it and the song which was propagated last week in the Institute. The comparison of the two pieces shows what can happen in the molecular structure of the brains of two Course VI, now graduates, who could evolve two such effusions, the one saying of the 'Stute with so much accuracy that The Lounger blushes for his Sunday-School training:

"Thy portals admit to all regions of knowledge," and the other remarking in that felicitous and musical style which suggests a block of wood falling down stairs, that

"What we know of Spencer's prose won't buy a hard-boiled shirt."

It is not that The Lounger doubts the truth of the statement for the large majority, but he writes simply to congratulate the Professor of English on the fact that the writer of this composition appreciated the difference in spelling between Spenser and Spencer. The Lounger can almost see the writer of this "poem" evaporating from satisfaction with the fact that the literary capacities and desires of Tech men find their limits in "Applied," DeWitt Talmage and The Lounger. Then too, the fact that Tech men are sufficiently deficient on the side of science which Spenser represents, must be another cause for exhilaration. In connection with this intelligent boast, The Lounger will call attention to one more picture. Last week The Lounger read the inspired lines:

"Thy purpose is broad as the world God created, Thy precepts are ever the emblems of truth."

There is a striking similarity of thought between this and the new slogan which is published in Technique and not the least so in the ending of the latter. Some day indeed in the near future when the Faculty duly appreciates the worth of this piece, the Freshman entering Rogers will doubtless behold, not the old gilt letters over the Secretary's office but one of these new broad-minded precepts, as for instance:

"To H—with Harvard
And to H—with Yale."

What the possibilities in this direction are The Lounger will not undertake to say. He can only console with the Professor of English that however deficient Tech men may be on the side of English, they rarely lapse into such things as the "battle-cry" in Technique.

Verily the reputation of Tech is approaching the sublime. As The Lounger has often sat upon that magnificent specimen of architecture, hallowed by their association with a Descrip problem—the steps of Rogers— which are but forerunners of the beauties and delights that lay in wait within (five flights in twenty seconds and then find the door locked) he has always been highly observant of the propensitv of the gentler sex to gaze with delight or vulgarly to "rubber" at the magnificent specimens of manly beauty who daily take their siesta on the downy softness of the aforementioned steps. That is to say, The Lounger had always thought it was the manly beauty that was the attraction, but he is in a quandary now as to what was the cause. But a short time ago, The Lounger happened to be walking behind one of those aerated fashion plates with cream colored hair, a hat warranted to eclipse anything within reach, and a dress that would darken a diffraction spectrum. She was accompanied by a companion equally inconspicuous; his yellow waistcoat and green tie gave him a bilious resemblance to a Spanish flag after the war. This couple, in search of the Mechanics Building, were just approaching Rogers, when the gorgeous feminine turned and asked her escort if that were the Dog Show. The Lounger didn't bite until it was too late; the shock had overpowered him. What he regrets most is that he must find a new place to repose; it is heart-breaking to have to abandon the old stone that he has polished till it shines, but The Lounger really can't bear the thought of the girls describing him as "such a pretty little-dear,—that one with the short legs, and a long nose, with a pipe in his mouth,—isn't he a darling, just too ugly for anything." Ugh! No, the mere thought is too much, it is absolutely unendurable.

Hollis Street Theatre. — Once more Viola Allen will appear in Boston in the well-known play, "The Christian." This play had a long run last year at the Museum and Miss Allen's acting was considered excellent. This is the last time that Miss Allen will appear in "The Christian" in this city.

Tremont Theatre. — Francis Wilson's revival of the ever-popular "Erminie" at this theatre has been attended by the success which has never yet failed to follow its presentation. No other piece of its class has remained so long and so high in favor with playgoers. Mr. Wilson's very diverting performance of Cadeaux, of course, has something to do with this, nevertheless the opera itself, with its lovely music, naturally comic situations and witty dialogue, contains all the elements of popularity.

Boston Museum. — "Why Smith Left Home," the latest farce by G. H. Broadhurst, is the next attraction at this theatre. The company is the original London one which has been having such a long run in New York.

Castle Square Theatre. — "Quo Vadis" will continue to be the attraction for still another week, making the third week of its continuous performance, with every prospect of another succession of big audiences. The great scene of the feast in the palace of Nero, and that of the arena, where the great wrestling match occurs, have seldom been surpassed in modern stage productions.

Columbia Theatre. — "The Lady Slavey" is having once more a good run, as when it was first presented to the Boston public. This play is a very jolly and funny one and everyone who sees it is sure to feel that they are fully repaid.
