The Lounger visited the Union yesterday and was captivated and enthralled by its charms. Do the students realize the advantages of the Union? In the old days when the class wanted to get to town, one at a time, would wander over to the chapel, perform the sacred rites, and then would find a few of his classmates. Next they would proceed around the building, visiting the Old Howard, Charlie Worth's and the Galley. Needless to say, the class would be disassembled from place to place, but it always happened that someone would be waiting for such a bunch at some new place that was unknown to the others and he would lose out on the class spirit. Now that all is changed with the advent of the Union and The Lounger recalls those famous lines of the Roman poet, Socrates, "In Union there is strength."

The Lounger's reveries were broken by the advent of B——. You probably know him but the Lounger had never heard of him which B—— thought was strange, in fact B—— claimed, "Why the sh--de-a." I guess he meant, "Why the idea," but southerners don't speak correctly anyway. He told the Lounger that troubles in running the Institute Committee, how no one would go on before his feet and express his opinions and how easy it was to pass anything through the committee. The Lounger was very surprised because in "the old days" they would have their meetings early in the month for an appropriation for $610. These meetings in the old days were much like this year's Technique Election committee meetings. The Lounger suggested a remedy: which is really wonderful. Of course the old days admitted that his ideas are all really wonderful but this was also because of its simplicity. The remedy is to call every member of the Council of the Electrical Committee and put them on the agenda on the Institute Committee, have their places on the Council of the Electrical Committee filled by the men in the Institute Committees who are always willing to vote but who haven't the term of putting pen into a meeting—B—— said that he had done his best and has asked the Lounger to come around to the next meeting, which is tomorrow. B—— has also extended an invitation to everyone else who desires to attend and to bring in suggestions of any nature. The Lounger will be there and his presence will prove to be just what the Institute Committee needs.

My wife sent me out to buy some ginger, and I absentmindedly asked for it in the tobacco shop.
