The condition at Central Square and at Massachusetts Avenue in the morning is so often a trial that it is well to mention that whenever possible the editorial will help to solve the problem and the Saturday issue of The Tech on February 15th. The editorial as shown above and decided to take immediate action to remedy the trouble. At once a service of one regular car every four minutes was inaugurated and between the hours of 8.30 and 9.30 a.m. in the morning shuttle cars are run every two minutes. This will be best for everyone concerned and will avoid having the connections at the Massachusetts Avenue station. There was always a crowd of people waiting there to catch a car and when one did come it was already loaded to over-capacity and a few of the brave souls dared to risk their lives by clinging to the rear end of the car. This habit acquired in mind as far as Harvard Square.

Such conditions as these not only about the problem at an important point but even more important. The officials of the company have suggested that the people have a little patience and will go to the first car that comes. Conditions are different now, as is evinced by an Itasa Chte£

HYDRAULIC STEAM PUMPS

Here are two examples of a line of hydraulic direct steam driven pumps that embody the most advanced practice in steam pump design. They are single cylinder, double acting with the valve and gears designed to eliminate short strokes.

They are built for operating hydraulic pressures at high or low pressure and for fast or slow speed. Pressure capacities run as high as 10,000 pounds per square inch and the displacement or pumping capacity up to 350 gallons per minute.
