MINING ENGINEER HEARD BY SENIORS

A. H. Rogers Speaks on “Business in Engineering” At Last Aldred Lecture

Last Friday A. H. Rogers, ’26, address- ed the Seniors in the Mining Engineering Department on “Business in Engineering.” In com- menting on the engineering profession, he said that engineering was completely separated from business, and that the engineer in its real functions is strictly connected with business. He said that the first thing an engineer does when leaving college is to sell his services, and that the engineer has to be a salesman. He also said that the engineer should not base his income on his interest in his profession. He said that the engineer should be interested in the development of new industries rather than in the exploitation of old ones.

SYRACUSE LEADS BEAVER OARSMEN BY SMALL MARGIN

Coach Haas’s Varsity Eight Presses Orange Crew To Fast Time

In a fast race on the Seneca River, Coach Haas’s Varsity Eight won by a small margin over the Syracuse crew. The Syracuse crew showed up well in defeat, as the two crews of Engineers were matched against each other weighing two pounds against three pounds. Syracuse took the lead at the start and never looked back. Although at the end of the first mile, the Orange crew moved closer, there was never any doubt of the outcome. In this race, the Syracuse crew won by a small margin of two pounds. Syracuse men showed their ability in the last half of the race by edging out the Orange crew by a small margin of two pounds.

THE GEOLOGIST AND HIS OPPORTUNITIES

By Professor W. F. Jukes

Geology, the science of the earth. Applied Geology is the science of that part of the earth's crust to which man is related, and is of the benefit of man. The geologist studies the processes by which the earth's crust is formed, and the resources of all kinds including mineral deposits, water, and petroleum. One deposit of these is the coal, where the economic development in the control of which is the most important. Geology is even beginning to have an influence on the development and control of raw materials, irrigation projects, mining operations, and in many other undertakings.

THEinousm has become an eminently practical and valuable science. Furthermore, the student who studies geology will find that he can earn his living and become a member of the society by using the knowledge of geology, and that he can earn his living and become a member of the society by using the knowledge of geology.

For more information on how to become a geologist, contact your local college or university for specific requirements and programs.
