WEATHER

IT IS APOTHEMATIC TO REMARK ON THE INCORPORATION OF BOSTON WEATHER WHICH CAMBRIDGE STUDENTS ARE LEARNING TO EVEN BEAR WITH.

- With a 20° drop in temperatures this past week, the campus has been transformed into a winter wonderland. Snow covered sidewalks and rooftops have become the new norm. Students have been seen donning their snow gear, braving the cold for classes and extracurricular activities.

- The recent snowfall has led to some minor disruptions in campus operations. The campus transit system has experienced delays, and some classes have been moved online due to weather-related cancellations. However, the community has rallied to support one another, making the best of the winter conditions.

CANNED KNOWLEDGE

- This approach has been well-received by the students, who have reported an increase in participation and a deeper understanding of the material.

- The instructor has also experimented with incorporating multimedia resources and group projects to further enhance the learning experience.

- The incident has raised questions about the role of humor and mischief in collegiate life. While some believe it is part of the fun and spirit of college, others argue that such behavior can be harmful and disrespectful.

- The administration has expressed concern about the behavior and is investigating the incident further to determine appropriate measures.

Losing only one bout out of eight, a strong frosh wrestling team swept the 175-pound and heavyweight class Saturday at Medford. The Beaver freshman matmen, especially the weights, were too much for the Tufts in every respect.

Jarvis Webb and Ed Brittenham gave the Tufts a scare, they were close to the boys when they pinned their opponents. Webb, a 175-pounder, was a very close match. He had wrestled twelve minutes of a six-minute, 29-second struggle before he was finally stopped. But Billyr, a little too anxious, fouled him and he would have hit some of the boys and would have been held for manslaughter.

The plotters left their victim in Woburn, and notified the police that a wild Indian was running around. Steinhardt was found by the police, and taken to headquarters for questioning.
