Boy's Workers Expand Program With Aid Of Girls

More interest than ever before is being shown in T.C.A.'s Boys' Work this year, and consequently more work is expected to be accomplished this winter than ever before. About thirty freshmen have volunteered to date. Technology student workers, under the leadership of Henry Davis, Jr., and more than 100 groups in 27 Greater Boston settlement houses are investigating about the possibilities of teaching underprivileged boys to play music and instrumental classes in a course nearly similar to that regularly given to Technology students at the Maxfield Association. This was one of the most popular of the projects by the youngsters, as might well have been expected. It is planned to carry on a similar program this year.

Female Club Leaders Inaugurated

However, boys are not the only youngsters who need leadership. In previous years a great deal related to the institute and the activities of female club leaders. Consequently, Hallara and Alpha Phi Beta, two of the other Boy's Workers went to Clinton and Tufts in order to recruit students to fill the wide-open need of these groups. From an incoming college class, principally Wellesley, one group of girls under leadership groups collaborated with T.C.A.'s Boy's Workers. Athletics, drama, cooking, cleaning, and model plane building for civilian defense spots are taught by the enthusiastic girls.

A feature of this year's social work is several co-op groups, such as a boy and a girl, which help interest groups of junior and senior students to work and play together in wholesome recreation and beneficial social work. With the rhythm in the community is eliminated, leaders baling this is an important development in child psychology. Athletics, games, dancing, drawing, and other activities possible only with mixed groups are incorporated into the program.

Boys' Work not a burden

However, boys are not the only girls whose work is more socialized in handling the responsibilities of their new positions.

This year, however, the Seniors leave in February, the same month that most of the new activity leaders take office. Senior Class officers including the President of the Undergraduate Association will also be leaving so that the Institute Committee will have to begin its all-important reign. Consequently, they must be elected some time before February. At the same time, the 1944 Institute Committee must be assembled to begin the new term of the organization.

The community's most urgent need is,
