Above the ground as yet, we decided to concentrate on the more general aspects of the building. It was intended, the dean informed us, to produce a close association of students and staff. In particular, it is designed to provide a place where a young married instructor, perhaps working on a higher degree, could live for his first few years. While there, he could look around in the suburbs for a place to live where he could raise children, away from the city, as well as being close to all the institute facilities.

Then, the dean continued, after the children were grown and off to college, he could return and be close to his work presumably till his dying day. "It's a whole new way of living," the dean summed up. "Well, not that we wish to give in," the dean informed us, to produce a closer association of students and staff. In particular, it is designed to provide a place where a young married instructor, perhaps working on a higher degree, could live for his first few years. While there, he could look around in the suburbs for a place to live where he could raise children, away from the city, as well as being close to all the institute facilities.

The building should be quite a handsome addition to the waterfront, with its brick finish and the play of light and shade due to the varied form of the balconies. Its beauty will be evident even through your childhood may be tinged by the memory of a city apartment house with its long dark corridors and ever-present odor of boiled cauliflower. Of course, this one will be different, at least we certainly hope so.
