They come in groups of two and three, stopping quickly through the cool night into the center of the Great Court. An un- Gray originated the riot idea and set up a copyholder which held the bail bond to increase and the planned deal.

Prominent in the gathering crowd was UMC Ed Howgate, a few of his less easily iden- tified friends, who led the non- previously 220-230 count. Asked why he was present, Krugman replied, “It’s a ball of fun.” An unidentified student con- fessed: “It’s either this or I lose the lease for the room.”

Dean Wadleigh and Gray were there also, watching patiently. The crowd marched to the steps under the columns where they posed for photographers.

Dean Wadleigh caught up with the mob and mounted the steps to address the throng. He began, “Have you heard the one that says, ‘Anybody who’s been in five revolutions and one accident forced him to begin again.’” The Campus Patrol are begin- ning to get interested (in the demonstration), and the bail bond isn’t big enough. Alumni holiday meetings opened to undergraduates

DURING Christmas vacation eight-teen MIT Alumni Clubs throughout the country will be holding meeting- to which undergraduates are being extended special invitations.

Most of the meetings will be regular sessions of the Alumni Club, which are planning more elaborate programs in- cluding speakers. Still other groups are initiating school scholars who are applying to MIT. These meetings will have three pur- poses:

• It is hoped that by having stu- dents personally at MIT talk to older alumni, the impact of the radical changes which have re- cently taken place will be clarified.

• It is thought that students may benefit from contact with alumni already in business and willing to share their experiences.

• At those meetings which high school will be held, their decisions on where to go next fall.

To resign as Dean

Dean Gray has been Associate Dean of Student Affairs for the past two and a half years, and chair- man of the Freshman Advisory Council since 1964. In an interview Friday Dr. Gray commented that he would be resigning both these positions for his health, which he described as “nearly full-time.” He didn’t provide any definite date for this change, however, but added that he would remain in close

TO BE THEIR GUESTS

Twenty-one of MIT's seventy-four U.S. and Canadian Alumni Clubs listed below are mailing invitations to home town undergraduates at their campus addresses to be their guests on the date shown, to meet fellow alumni and, in some cases, to meet prospective freshmen.

Alumni welcome a chance to hear about the Institute first-hand, and are a good source for undergraduates who seek career information.

If, by chance, you do not receive an invitation from your home town alumni listed below, phone the Alumni Association—extension 3878—we can correct the oversight, and let them know you will attend; they do have to guarantee the number attending.

Inconceivable! He argued that without such a report Beaver Key mem- bers would copy the previous Field Day without bothering to study its structure.

But of events debated

The strongest attack on the com- mittee's report was delivered by Karla Hurst '68, McCormick Hall President. She objected to the use of coeds for "comic relief." Mark Mathis, President of the Class of '68, explained that in view of his attempts to get coeds for the tug-of-war, this was a "trivial" situation. Coeds want to participate in Field Day, yet not be laughed at. They do not want to perform in events that might make them appear feminine, especially if the ones you might want," for such an event.

Several members expressed fear that acceptance of this report by Inscomm would constitute a final decision of the structure of next year's Field Day. After the last paragraph of the report was point- ed out — "the proposals were only of a general nature and that Beaver Key should fill in the details," the report was accepted without objection.

Vietnam poll sought

Also passed at the meeting was a resolution to conduct a poll on the war in Vietnam, subject to ap- proval of the questionnaire when completed. Of course, the resolution was not passed quite easily. Miles Krasnobaty '68, Senior House President and chairman of the ad hoc committee established to formulate a questionnaire, ex- plained that the various political groups on-campus were being con- trolled in order that all viewpoints might be represented. As a re- sult, there was no discussion of the individual questions on the

Letters to The Tech

To the Editor:

Rush Week bias

I am writing to inform all Tech readers of the biases held by the rush committee. As someone who has been through Rush Week, I can attest to the fact that the committee has shown a clear bias towards certain fraternities. This has not only affected the students who are being considered for rush, but also those who are already members of fraternities. It is unfortunate that the committee is not conducting itself in an unbiased manner.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

The Beauties placed a Christmas tree in the dormitory that took down the banners from various men's dorms adorning the same staircase. What is alarming, however, is that there appears to be no end in sight.

118. The last reading of the director of the fraternity council might notice that Henry F. Fahey Jr., a sophomore in Course 2., has taken a renewed interest in the fraternity system compared to those at AT, other colleges, and because of the praise with which fraternities are looked upon, there is a feeling that hazing is non-existent in our own. Granted, barbarous acts.

119. The result of this malicious destruction is that such behavior is punished. The Burschites, however, have taken revenge. They placed a Christmas tree in the dormitory that took down the banners from various men's dorms adorning the same staircase. What is alarming, however, is that there appears to be no end in sight.

The long walls and the frequent Automatic fire alarms make it impossible to persuade people is the Student Center, because the fire alarm on the first and second floors. Those in the know claim the noise is just the elevator causing noise. The noise is nothing to worry about. Yet, many of the people who have recently taken to climbing around to avoid the fire alarm are now coming back with the safety of the valid fire alarm system.

The Grateful Dead, one of the current popular San Francisco Bay area groups to make it nationally, made their Boston debut Friday night at the Psychadelic Supermarket. The most impressive thing about their sets was the personal involvement and support they had with the audience. If there is one characteristic besides the geographical fact that the San Francisco groups have in common, it is this genuine warmth, openness, and just plain friendliness: the idea that "we love you." In a conversation between set, guitarist and group leader Jerry "Captain Trips" Garcia reflected this musical philosophy.

Musical friendships
Garcia is generally recognized as one of the four or five best rock guitarists. He and the amorphous object known only as Pigpen form the nucleus of the group. (Pigpen's real name, according to Dead guitarist Bob Weir, is "Bobby Canell—and he's only 21."") The group has also had two drummers for two months now. The whole group are good friends with all the Bay area groups, going back to the time when they were all starving on the streets together. For example, the Grateful Dead is very close to Jorma Kaukonen and Jack Casady of the Jefferson Airplane, as well as to Big Brother and the Holding Company's Janis Joplin, who along with Pigpen is in '69's number one poster idol, and whom Garcia calls "the best black blues singer there is."

Contact with audience
Dissatisfied that the audience sat and listened rather than danced during the first set, they opened the second show with a finely produced half-hour version of "I'll Be Mine," which included bits of "Get on Up" and other songs. Mr. Ross Lawer, who runs things at the Supermarket, said, "I've been trying to get people to dance for two months, and this is the first time it's happened. It's great."

The Dead's performance live is completely different from that on their Warner Brothers albums. Their songs, which average ten to fifteen minutes in person, are not, except for "Viola Lee Blues," long to the format. For this reason they will probably never have a hit single, although they put out a hit single, although they put out "Truckin" in March, with Pigpen's real name, according to Dead guitarist Bob Weir, is "Bobby Canell—and he's only 21."

The Golden Road (To Unlimited Devotion)/"Creme Puff War" last spring. They are scheduled to release another single in February, and a new album, which will contain five tracks, in March.

Identification is major theme of Pinter's "The Dwarfs"

By Ray Hagstrom

Recently, a lady wrote Harold Pinter, in reference to one of his plays, "Who are the two men?"—"Where did they come from?"—"Are they supposed to be normal?"--the playwright replied, "Who are you?"

Who are the two men?—"Where did they come from?"—"Are they supposed to be normal?"—"Who are you?"—"Who are the two men?—"Where did they come from?"—"Are they supposed to be normal?"--the playwright replied, "Who are you?"

The focus of this is stated, "We depend on these convoluted accidents to survive."

The play itself is another success for Pinter. There is a very natural, unfolding of the action through the characters. Never do they react out of countenance. Skillful acting and directing iron out the difficult parts where a weaker performance would make the action implausible.

Williams seems crude

Pinter himself picked "The Local Stigmatic" by Heathcote Williams as the running mate for "The Dwarfs." Pinter is a hard act to follow. The characters by comparison seem out of place. The action is blunt—Williams tries to beast some response out of the audience. Certainly this is a valid means of eliciting reaction, but it seems crude after Pinter's finesse.

Williams' best-used tactic is the well delivered obscenity. The play culminates in the beating and torture of an innocent man. All of the plot is the gradual realization that in spite of their clashes, the Dwarfs need each other to survive. The conclusion of this is stated, "We depend on these convoluted accidents to survive."

The plot of "The Dwarfs" revolves around three characters whose identities meld as the play unfolds. By the end of the play, Mark, Len and Pete resemble the three facets of personality. Mark is the vain one who never blinks his cool, he needs the other characters to serve him. Pete is adroit and businesslike—he fought his way up the social ladder from a rustic background to the city. He says characteristically, "Thinking got me into this and thinking's got to get me out." Len is caught between these two. They do battle for his attention. He feels no great need for the other two characters, yet he bow to their wishes.

He is further persecuted by the Dwarfs. The Dwarfs intend to do Mark and Pete harm, but Len is trying to protect them. The focus of the plot is the gradual realization that in spite of their clashes, the three men need each other to survive. The conclusion of this is stated, "We depend on these convoluted accidents to survive."

The action is blunt—Williams tries to beat some response out of the audience. Certainly this is a valid means of eliciting reaction, but it seems crude after Pinter's finesse.

The Theatre Company of Boston has moved to a new location. They have remodeled a theater located at 156 Mass. Ave., just off Boylston. The new quarters are much better than their previous spartan arrangements at the Hotel Touraine. This new location, being quite close to campus, coupled with the well chosen repertoire this season promises to make TCB a likely spot for an evening out.

Pistol team trounces Boston State; Riflers split with BC, Providence

The Tech pistol team had a field day Saturday afternoon as they trounced a young Boston State team 236-182. Considering that the visiting team had only six entrants and that the number of students exceeds 500, the victory was fairly decisive. Leading the Tech shooters was Eddie Burck, who topped the field with a 96 and a 567. The other outstanding shooters were Dennis Swanson '68 with a 95 and Ken Mann '67 with a 563. Captains Bill Miller '70 and Tom Hafer '70 combined to take one-two in the 151.5 pound division with losses of 18 and 21 points respectively.

The team was led by the dynamic and almost reckless shooter and strategist, he should be provided for 300 spectators. The match will be played to 125 points to the winner.

In the 1000, Wilson and John Owens '70 set a blistering pace for the first seven minutes to lead the Techmen to a 240-152. Ben Wilson '70 eclipsed the meet and cage records with a 7:39 pin over Rich Ruka. "It was his first intercollegiate match, and he converted. The boys took the ball out with 17 seconds left and tied a long pass to break the press. Jansson is accepted and displayed down course for the winning basket, and 27 points to lead the scoring.

Bates tops thincads as Wilson, Sydoriak break meet and cage records

By John Wragge

Tech's hockey team bounced back from losing its opening game to UMass by beating WPI by a score of 6-2 at home opener here Tuesday night. Tech took the lead with a goal scored by John Owens '70, followed by an assist from Phil Miller '70 with a first and third place finishes in the high bar. Hood and Miller reversed places to place one-two in the high bar. The engineers bounced back from a 2-year absence from the competitive level, the performance of the competitor is based solely on the quality of his performance.

Gymnasts stop Dartmouth; Sophs star in 124-107 win

By George Novozohed

Traveling to Dartmouth, the varsity gymnasts snuffed them 124-107 as they snuffed a new record. The Techmen were led by captains Dick Hood '70 with two firsts and Phil Miller '70 with a first and third place finishes.

The meet stayed close for the first four events before the Techmen widened their lead at the finish. Dartmouth took the floor exercise and balance beam right back with a first on this division. Next, Hood and Tom Hafer '70 combined to take one-two in the still rings.

Through the crucible, the crumpling, Millwood swept long long vaulting. Hafer then took second on the parallel bar and finally Millwood reversed places to place one-two in the high bar. The Techmen brought forth their third victory tomorrow when they invade Plymouth State.

For those not familiar with gymnastics, it is a great spectator sport, and despite the competitive level, the performance of the competitor is based solely on the quality of his performance.
