Mass primaries today; six vie for Att'y General

By Mike McNamara

Massachusetts voters went to the polls today to vote in the primary elections for a variety of state and local offices.

Although several other important primaries are being held around the country today— notably gubernatorial and senatorial nominations in New York State and a tight senatorial contest in Colorado—Massachusetts' primary ranks as one of the most important—and possibly the most confusing.

Six candidates, for instance, are vying for the Democratic nomination for state attorney general. In the 3rd Massachusetts Congressional District Worcester area seven Democrats are lining up for the nomination to replace retiring U.S. Representative Harold Donahue, a 27-year Congression al veteran.

Statewide, the Democratic party has a close down-to-the-wire fight for the nomination for governor. Liberal State Representative Michael Dukakis, with his slogan "Michael Dukakis Should Be Governor," has recently been engaged in a mid-slogging battle with State Attorney General Robert H. Quina for the nomination.

The winner of that battle will probably face incumbent Governor Francis W. Sargent, MIT class of 1939, who is expected to triumph easily over his Republican primary opponent, Carroll Shedd.

Middlesex County, a 54-town area which includes Cambridge, has been struggling to win the nomination for the three-man board of County Commissioners. Two of the candidates are Lester Ralph and Paul E. Tsong.

The winning candidate will face a crowded field of other primary candidates in the November election.

Six MIT faculty members protest US Cyprus policy

By Michael Garry

Six members of the MIT faculty have acted in an attempt to influence the Ford Administration's policy toward Cyprus.

The faculty members signed a full-page advertisement in the Sunday New York Times in Review asking, in part, that President Ford keep the Cyprus situation from deteriorating into an "abyss of human suffering beyond redemption."

Chairman of the Faculty Ellen G. Yoffie, who also participated Sunday in a demonstration in Washington against the US Cyprus policy, signed the advertisement, as did Professor Melvin Dertouzos of the Electronic Systems Laboratory.

Other professors who signed were Michael Dertouzos, Computer Science, Harry Gatos, Electrical Engineering, and Zenon Tannenbaum, Management. Senior Lecturer in Mechanical Engineering George Hatzopoulos also signed.

MIT Vice-President Constantine Simonides told The Tech that he had intended to sign the advertisement, but did not get a chance to after modifications were made.

The advertisement said "several issues of justice and humanitarian concern" were raised by the US policy toward Cyprus.

Four specific points were raised:

1) If the US can't stop Turkey, which is largely maintained with American money, where can it stop aggression?
2) It is hardly in our national interest to contribute, by our inaction, to the disintegration of the peace-loving factions of the United Nations.
3) Current American policy on Cyprus is alienating Greece, according to the advertisement.
4) "What is the nature of the humanitarian or political logic which permits the endangerment of the lives of 650,000 people (the Greek majority) in order to safeguard the rights of 115,000 (the Turkish minority)"

The advertisement concludes by suggesting immediate removal of invading forces from the island of Cyprus, and suggests that their continued presence will make a lasting peace more difficult to achieve.

Yoffie, deeply shaken by recent events in Cyprus, told The Tech he could not rationalize (Please turn to page 3)

Limbo frosh packed in dorms

By Storm Kaufman

With dormitory assignments completed, a total of 63 extra freshmen have been packed into the system, effectively overcrowding about 150 dorm residents.

Of the 657 students placed in dormitory assignments this year, 63 of them (or 9.5%) received their first choices (see table). This 90% first choice goal was stated earlier in the year by the Admissions Office assisting with legal aspects of the change.

Jim Gust '74, one of the MIT chapter's delegates to the national meeting in 1972 in an attempt to reform the nation's policies on coedity, but had not been successful. Gusting was scheduled for the meeting the summer, but the chapter considered it more important to work on saving its chapter, Gust said.

The group must now establish the house as a separate entity from the fraternity, with overlapping memberships, Gust said. "We haven't worked out just how the arrangement would be made." The MIT chapter has a "reasonable chance" of being reinstated, says Gust. "We're not yet ready, but that the issue is not yet settled within the house.

By Mike McNamara

The MIT chapter of Sigma Nu fraternity has been severed from its national organization as a result of disagreements over the national's coedity policy.

The chapter was notified after an Aug. 14 vote by the Sigma Nu Grand Chapter, the fraternity's ruling body, to withdraw the MIT chapter's charter.

The national organization "felt that we were not making it clear that women are not members of Sigma Nu," said Carol McGuire '73, president of the house. Although Sigma Nu does not accept women in the national fraternity, the MIT house became coed in 1971.

The house is in the process of changing its name to Epillon Theta (fraternity), McGuire said, with the Dean for Student Affairs Office assisting with legal aspects of the change.

Jim Gust '74, one of the MIT chapter's delegates to the national meetings, said that the Grand Chapter had decided to act against the MIT group after articles appeared in the national press about McGuire's election to the chapter's presidency.

"They didn't agree with the way we tried to resolve the difficulties of having women in a non-coed fraternity," Gust said. Gust explained that, while the men in the house are members of Sigma Nu fraternity, the women are not.

"We tried to make it clear that the women were members of the 'house,' and not the fraternity," Gust said. "The national didn't feel we made the distinction clear enough."

"The move by the national deprived the chapter of the right to use the name 'Sigma Nu,'" McGuire said. "They (the national) didn't want women passing themselves off as Sigma Nu."

Gust said that the chapter had lobbying for the board of directors at this national meeting in 1972 in an attempt to regain the national's policies on coedity, but had not been successful. Lobbying was scheduled for the meeting this summer, but the chapter considered it more important to work on saving its chapter, Gust said.

The group must now establish the house as a separate entity from the fraternity, with overlapping memberships, Gust said. "We haven't worked out just how the arrangement would be made."

Ford's Nixon pardon attacked

By Barb Moore

Reaction around MIT to President Richard Nixon's pardon of former President Gerald Ford's actions is divided. President Ford announced Sunday morning that he was exercising his constitutional power of pardon to unconditionally pardon Nixon for all federal crimes that he "committed or may have committed or taken part in" during his term as president.

Ford stated that he felt Nixon could not get a fair trial after the publicity caused by the Watergate scandal. He added that bringing the former president to trial would divide the country and undermine the credibility of American institutions.

The most notable effect so far of Ford's announcement is the resignation Sunday afternoon of his press secretary, Jerald F. terHorst. The Associated Press quoted terHorst as saying that he could not "in good conscience" accept the President's action "even though I knew he took that action in good conscience."

At MIT, most comments were not so charitable. Louis Menand, Assistant to the Provost and Lecturer in Political Science, said, "Ford has not kept faith in the American people. This is an insult to the Congress."

Menand said he has written a letter to Senator Birch Bayh (D-Ind.), "the man responsible for anyone involved, since the pardon includes a strong possibility of guilt."

Professor of Political Science Ithiel de Sola Pool said, "What is done should be done equitably for all those involved, not only the president."

Nixon accepted the pardon from his estate in San Clemente, Calif., where he has lived since resigning the presidency on August 9. Nixon said he hoped Ford's action "will contribute to lifting the burden of Watergate from our country."

He added that he could see "clearly now" that he was wrong in not acting more decisively and more forthrightly in dealing with Watergate.

There are still many questions to be answered as to what Nixon's responsibilities may be concerning Watergate. He can still be called as a witness in the Watergate cover-up trial, assuming the trial will begin as planned. Since he has been pardoned, he cannot take the fifth Amendment to avoid self-incrimination, and must consequently testify in all trials for which he is subpoenaed.

Nixon can still be prosecuted under state law, since the presidential pardon forbids Federal prosecution only. He is still responsible for civil suits filed against him.

If he is not convicted of any felony on the state level, he is eligible to run for Federal office again in the future.

drawn to see "feels strongly" about the issues discussed in the advertisement and is "anxiously to the issues come to the attention of the proper people in the country."

What was not mentioned in the letter, Dertouzos added, is "that because the talk had been started by the Greek military leaders it should not be inferred that the Greek people wanted or started the trouble."

Zannetos expressed considerable distress over the Cyprus situation, saying the policies of the State Department had "dealt a death blow" to Cyprus by encouraging the Turkish invasion of the independent country and allowing it to become "a battleground for the differences between the Turkish government and the military government of Greece." He called these policies "a violation of the principles for which the United States stands."

as, are running for higher offices in the primary, which might leave a vacancy in the board.

The remaining incumbent Democrat John L. Danely, is regarded as a conservative who would attempt to reverse reform efforts made in the last two years by Ralph and Tsangas. Observers point out that if Danely is reelected and, since there are no Republican candidates, automatically re-elected, a possibility exists that one or two openings would be made on the board of commissioners. These opening would be filled by appointment, with clerk of the county court Edward Sullivan as an appointee of the county reform movement casting a crucial vote.

Two of Danely's primary opponents are ranked as serious challengers — Charles L. Clough of Concord and Pasquale Coppola of Somerville.

The gubernatorial campaign quickened this week in what one observer termed "the Eight-Day Campaign" — the time between Labor Day and today's primary. Charges and countercharges flew on the Democratic side as Liberal Saltonstall and Ambassador Dukakis continued to exchange attacks. These conservative forces were further angered when an advertisement appeared this week in the Real Paper and Newton and Brookline weeklies.

A poster, signed by leading liberal Democrats, proclaimed "We Democrats are waiting for Frank Sargent." Even if Sargent defeats Sheehan in today's voting, he is expected to encounter difficulty in pulling the state Republican party together behind him.

Nerds, Phreaks, Tools, Turkeys, and Other Fools

By Steven Kaufman

One of the more intriguing aspects of living at the Institute is getting to know the characters— or characterizations— of the various living groups.

As one wanders about the non-tv covered halls of Technology (what the peepies used to call this god forsaken place more than thirty years ago), one hears all manner of new and wonderful insulting epithets. Neerd, tool, turkey, and phreak join the old favorites of jock, cretin, and asshole.

Having been both sides of the name-calling stick for more than three years, I have finally made the observation that certain labels seem reserved for certain living groups.

First of all, there are the distinctions made between those who dwell in fraternity brotherhoods and those who are located into the halal tonments better known as dormitories. Nerds, turkey, tool, and jock are usually restricted to the Institute housing. The reason is unknown, possibly the Deans’ Office maintains a list of “freshmen freshies” (something like the non-existent grades kept in pre-med files) which permits them to screen out the cretins and the assholes.

I am informed that the right process of the fraternities is a process of self-perpetuation. As you identify with the cretins and assholes get control, you don’t have a chance: they can find one of their kinds in a multitude of the turkeys and jocks come in gaggles and quail come in coveys (and further believe the internation) then do what turkey does (etc.).

Jocks are somewhat of an exception. While jocks come from everywhere, only jocks come from fraternities. For some reason, no one ever asks you seriously unless they are from a fraternity. (At this time, I could also make a statement about stds, but I won’t).

Correlates the overall system labels, specific living groups receive their own handles.

For instance, no one has heard of the Tech Fraternity. Although some of the straightest people you’ll never want to know are considered to be Tech Fraternity, not one of them has ever been questioned by some members of the national fraternity. As a result of unfortunate publicity about the election of a woman as president of the living group, the High Council (the executive body of the national fraternity) suspended the charter of the MIT chapter, Epsilon Theta of Sigma Nu, pending clarification of these issues.

The publicity began with a human interest story in Tech Talk about the election of Carol McGuire ’75 as the commander of the living group. At Tech Talk’s suggestion, the article was released to the Associated Press, with the naive assumption that the distinctions between house and chapter would be preserved. Careless editing reduced the article to a caption, following the statement that McGuire was commander of the chapter.

This appeared in newspapers all over the country.

From the time that women were admitted into the living groups, there have been two distinct groups: the chapter, Epsilon Theta of Sigma Nu, and the house, Epsilon Theta Fraternity. Epsilon Theta Fraternity was caused by disagreements arising over the role women play in a group affiliated with an all-male fraternity.

In the past six months, the roles of women with respect to the chapter, and of men with respect to the chapter with respect to the national fraternity have been questioned by some members of the national fraternity. As a result of unfortunate publicity about the election of a woman as president of the living group, the High Council (the executive body of the national fraternity) suspended the charter of the MIT chapter, Epsilon Theta of Sigma Nu, pending clarification of these issues.

We propose the opposite. To fail to punish Mr. Nixon for his actions is to make a mockery of our system of justice. Mr. Nixon’s former friends have been convicted or pleaded guilty to crimes involved in the Watergate affair, many of whom will serve time in prison for their offenses. It is fair to punish them, and not the former President, when evidence exists that shows Mr. Nixon was aware of, and participated in, their felonious actions.

As far as the American people, what could be more divisive than to allow Mr. Nixon to escape without any punishment for the crimes which he committed?

Mr. Ford says that it would be impossible for the former president to receive a fair trial in the post-Watergate era. Maybe so; but that is a matter for the courts to decide, not the President who reached his present position through the actions of the man he is pardoning.

President Ford has declared that bringing Mr. Nixon to trial would split an already-divided country irrevocably. Yet to ignore the crimes perpetrated under Mr. Nixon’s administration will do even more harm, further alienating the citizens of this country and driving their traditional faith in government— already dangerously low—to down further.

Equally important, an American public which welcomed the Ford Administration, and its accompanying rhetoric of openness and candor, with open arms has been given reason to doubt Mr. Ford’s devotion to the attributes he has championed. Coupled with the President’s request to Congress for large sums to support the ex-President in the style to which he became accustomed, if not well liked to the public, the President, who would otherwise command no sympathy.

And is it consistent for the President who insists draft evaders and deserters “must work their way back” with acts of contempt to pardon Mr. Nixon, who has expressed regret only for becoming more quickly to contain the scandal that toppled him?

The only action possible, now that Mr. Ford has precended criminal prosecution through courts, is further Congressional investigation of the former President’s role in the Watergate scandal. We urge the MIT Community to act in support of such investigation, and to protest in every open way to Mr. Ford’s pardon of the former President.

Sigma Nu to Epsilon Theta: why?

By the Members of Epsilon Theta Fraternity

The MIT living group Sigma Nu is changing its name to Epsilon Theta. This is occurring as a result of our present suspension from the national fraternity of Sigma Nu, a suspension caused by disagreements arising over the role women play in a group affiliated with an all-male fraternity.

In the past six months, the role of women with respect to the chapter and the chapter with respect to the national fraternity have been questioned by some members of the national fraternity. As a result of unfortunate publicity about the election of a woman as president of the living group, the High Council (the executive body of the national fraternity) suspended the charter of the MIT chapter, Epsilon Theta of Sigma Nu, pending clarification of these issues.

'74 campaigns: no one is a politician

By Fred H. Hutchinson

The morning of the last August 29th, a Democratic candidate for the US Senate from New Hampshire, outside the Portsmouth Navy Yard shaking hands and handing out red-white-and-blue cards detailing his 'six Senate goals.'

The Irish steelworker in blue work shirt and grey trousers walking beside the French welder with black lunch box in hand, did not want to hear how a Dartmouth professor who looks like a Dartmouth professor would single-handedly end inflation, especially not at six-thirty on a Friday morning.

Radway, a self-proclaimed "little man who cares about little people," instead choseology -- an approach he often takes -- to greet the still-sleepy laborers.

"No phony campaign promises," he said, "just a case of beer for every home.

"I've been a political scientist for over twenty years, but I'm not a politician," reads an advertisement for a national campaign.

In this, the first post-Watergate election year, none want to be labeled "politicians." For politicians one finds in the handouts and in the carefully worded advertisements -- consumer advocate, rancher, lawmaker, defense expert, small businessman, or tax specialist -- a lack of certain image.

Rampant Apathy

But the question to be partially answered when the results of today's primaries in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, and elsewhere are finally in: "Does anyone really care?" Extremely light turnouts in earlier '74 primaries in earlier '74 primary elections point to a sagging support.

Apathy is rampant, Howard J. Samuels and Hugh L. Carey, democratic candidates for Governor of New York, each held recent noon-time rallies in heavy populated areas of New York City -- one in the middle of Brooklyn, the other in the garment district of Manhattan, and nobody came. Polls indicate that name recognition for all elected officials has dropped. Even candidates who have spent a large portion of their campaign on the road meeting people, are seldom recognized.

"Someone suggest the apathy is due in large part to the political scandals of the past two years and their prominence in the national news media. Others believe the lack of political emotion stems from steadily inflation and the high cost of living coupled with a proven inability on the part of government to deal with such problems.

Whatever the cause, the effect has limed the issues in this fall's campaigns to solely economic and domestic concerns, at the exclusion of national security and foreign policy matters.

During Radway's 360 mile walk from the Canadian border to Massachusetts, in which he talked with literally thousands of New Hampshire residents, not a single person commented on foreign relations or national defense -- Radway's campaigns to solely economic and domestic concerns, at the exclusion of national security and foreign policy matters.

One can only wonder how an ex-Congressman attempting a comeback after six years as a petty bureaucrat in the Department of Agriculture could afford to loan himself $25-thousand out of the clear blue to wage a well-financed campaign. Perhaps the public will never know.

The real conflicts of interest in politics will probably never be eliminated until full public financing of campaigns becomes a reality, and perhaps not even then.

The New Politics

Larry Radway has been characterized by some as a member of the "New Politics." I find that term somewhat confusing and a bit of a misnomer. If it is taken to mean honesty in government, open campaigns, and a genuine interest in people and their problems, then I guess a significant portion of the people running for elected office in 1974 qualify as "New Politicians."

Maybe I'm politically naive and terri- torily optimistic, but there is something refreshing about a man who when asked what he is going to do when he gets down to Washington replies: "Nothing but steal your money."

Sigma Nu to Epsilon Theta: why?

bers of the house, our alumni, the MIT community, and Sigma Nu national. We must re-evaluate our relationships with these groups; we must secure our own independence and stability as a local fraternity. We recognize the living group we know to suffer from this change. We feel that our lifestyle is valid; it will be continued.

Without the future of our relationship with the MIT community to change, as only the name will be different.

Fraternities changing their name or going local is not a new thing at MIT. It is, however, a situation that has been forced on us without preparation. We have chosen to appeal to the members of the MIT community who have been involved in similar situations. We request that you communicate your notes and information, not only from those groups that have gone local, but also from those that contemplated the change, but decided to remain part of a national fraternity.

At present we are in limbo, awaiting a response to our appeal of the suspension from the High Council. Our final decision has not yet been made until we know the exact conditions presented to us, but right now we can only envision four main courses of action.

The first is, to establish ourselves as a local fraternity, with men and women as equal members of an independent living group. Alternatively, we could reaffirm our relationship with Sigma Nu. One option would be to have women reside at Sigma Nu only as boarders, having no say in the affairs of the house, run by the all-male chapter. Lastly, we could rejoin Sigma Nu as an all-male group, with no women living in the house. These last two options are obviously unacceptable to both the men and the women in the house. When we are presented with the conditions for our readmission, we will decide as a house which course of action is in our best interest: staying local, or rejoining the national fraternity.

While the office-seekers may say that the High Council became concerned over the unfortunate publicity, and there is sentiment on both sides that some compromise, some resolution of the misunderstandings and disagreements, can be reached. There is a recognition among national officials that the matter is not closed; in fact, it is on the agenda for the next High Council meeting, this fall. We look forward to some reconciliation with Sigma Nu fraternity in the near future, and to the continuation of the many benefits we have received in the past through our association with Sigma Nu.

There are some adjustments to be made. Unfamiliar Epsilon Theta must replace the familiar Sigma Nu. Until the women in our house can be initiated as Sigma Nu, we must remain Epsilon Theta. Alternatively, we could reaffirm our relationship with Sigma Nu. One option would be to have women reside at Sigma Nu only as boarders, having no say in the affairs of the house, run by the all-male chapter. Lastly, we could rejoin Sigma Nu as an all-male group, with no women living in the house. These last two options are obviously unacceptable to both the men and the women in the house. When we are presented with the conditions for our readmission, we will decide as a house which course of action is in our best interest: staying local, or rejoining the national fraternity.
Delays threaten housing, ChemEng

By Mike McNamee

MIT officials are currently assessing the effects of work delays on two buildings under construction on the MIT campus—delays which could have damaging effects on the Institute housing and academic programs.

This summer, by members of the Cement Finishers and Ironworkers unions against Boston-area contractors have resulted in setting back the completion dates for a new dormitory being built on West Campus and the new Chemical Engineering Building, near East Campus. Although it is unlikely that the strikes will result in increased costs for the Institute, "completion of the building definitely will be delayed," said Paul F. Barrett, Superintendent of Engineering and Construction in the Physical Plant Department.

"We're now working with the contractors to assess the amount of delay, and should soon have an estimate," said Barrett.

The contractors, Turner Construction Company of Boston and Vappi and Company of Cambridge, will probably have to absorb the costs of the delay, since MIT has fixed-price contracts with them, Barrett said.

But the cost to the Institute might be greater than the monetary cost, since the new dorm has been included in plans for housing students in 1975-76. The Chemical Engineering building is scheduled for completion next summer; delays in completion could mean that the building will not be ready for use next fall.

Barrett said that there was no major problem yet, "but it would be well to have the purchase of FNCB Travelers Checks. Good anytime during the year after year!..."
By Jules Mallozze

Students demand for term-time work is increasing this year, but financial aid officials say the job market will be able to handle the demand.

Larry Maguire, head of the MIT Student Employment Office, attributed the increase in student job needs to a tightening economy and to increased use of his office by students. Maguire cited the filling of 790 new jobs in the past months as an indication that, "Employers are beginning to see students in general, and particularly MIT students, as a really good deal.

Recruitment successful: advisor shortage averted

By Mike McNamme

A threatened shortage of advisors for the incoming freshman class was averted by a last-minute rush of faculty signing up for the program last spring.

For the first time in several years, enough advisors were available to handle the load of new students at the Institute, according to Peter Buttner, Associate Dean for Student Affairs and head of the Freshman Advisory Council.

"We had to give some advisors more advisees than they stated they would like to have," Buttner said, "but all the students were assigned.

Buttner said that he had been concerned early in May when it appeared that the number of faculty and staff signing up to advise was lower than ever before. This coupled with two other factors—the increased size of the class of 1978 and a drop in the average preferred number of advisors—led to fears that the class would be underserved.

After letters were sent to heads of academic departments urging them to recruit advisors, and reminder letters given to faculty members, the number of advisors increased significantly, Buttner said.

"Not only did we get more advisors, but the advisors signed up late managed to bring the average number of advisees preferred up to normal," the dean added.

Buttner explained that each faculty or staff member who signs up as an advisor states the number of students he would prefer to have and the maximum number of students he could take. Although the FAC ties to assign each advisor his preferred number, many advisors had to take up to their maximum number, Buttner said.

They provide a hall of a resource and as a result new areas of employment are opening up.

An even better job market is predicted by Maguire once the employment office begins matching students with certain qualifications and preferences to jobs entailing such a background. "Whenever a student comes in," Maguire said, "we ask him to fill out a reference card telling all about what he wants to do and is qualified for.

"Imagine if we can get a student with a certain background and certain likes, and match him up with an employer who wants exactly that," Maguire continued. "The student goes away happy because he got what he wants and the employer finds that he has just what he needs. Pretty soon the word gets around and we have three new openings."

Maguire added that preparing for this new system has taken a good portion of the office's time during the last six months.

Another thing that Maguire mentioned as being done during summer was the sending out of 1500 employment surveys to students. Maguire said that he didn't know what the results of that survey would be but that it was currently being studied by his staff.

The Student Employment Office was established last year as an effort to match more students with jobs suitable for their skills. Formerly, jobs had just been listed in the Student Financial Aid office.

Exhibition tie opens fall soccer season

By Glenn Brownstein
MIT's varsity soccer team opened its 1974 pre-season schedule Saturday by tying Bowdoin, 4-4, after missing 4-0 at halftime.

The Engineers played a sloppy first half, as might be expected after only four days of practice. MIT's play however, improved, as the game progressed, and the Engineer booters picked up their first game experience of the season.

Bowdoin tallied twice in each of the first two quarters (the teams played four thirty-minute periods instead of the standard forty-five minute halves) as the MIT squad appeared somewhat disorganized. The Engineers retaliated in the third quarter, cutting the deficit to 4-2 against a Bowedoin team composed mostly of second-stringers.

In the fourth quarter, though, even the return of many of the Bowdoin starters could not stop the surging Engineers, who scored twice more to gain the tie. MIT's defensive corps continued to keep Bowdoin attackers out of the MIT goal area, as the halfback and fullback lines were able to work man-to-man switches that repeatedly halted Bowdoin's attempts to get offensive plays started.

Shin Yoshida '76, last year's leading scorer, tallied three times for the Engineers, while Fred Tschesney '76 scored, the other MIT goal.

MIT continues its pre-season scrimmage schedule with a contest Friday afternoon against Clark University at Briggs Field.

Bradley drives to 5th win

This weekend, the MIT/Buiter King Racing Team's leading driver, Joel Bradley, increased his summer-long winning streak in the Showroom Stock Car class to five by taking the opening race of the Sports Car Club of America rally at Bryant Motor-Sports Park in New Hampshire.

Bradley's MIT/Buiter King Pinto was clearly the fastest stock machine at Bryant, qualifying on the pole, and leading all 20 laps of Sunday's race. Archival Paul Hackner and R. Walter Codd could not come close to the pace maintained by Bradley's car, and finished third, several seconds behind the winner.

The surprise star of the weekend was MIT graduate student Steve Cairns, who pushed his Pinto into second place three laps from the end and hold it there. Cairns was also credited with driving the fastest lap of the race. In his first five races, Cairns had finished second twice, third once, and fifth once.

In Monday's race, Bradley again was fastest and led the race, but did not finish. Cairns stayed with Hacker's Colt, but was still behind at the end, finishing second.

Bradley's non-finishing position in Monday's race dropped his championship with 51 points to Paul Tsuchiya '76, last year's champion.

Foul Shots

By Dan Gent
Just a few notes for you today.
Elsewhere on this page you'll find a new feature of the sports section called "sporting notices." Hopefully, this will help fill the need for the dissemination of sports information at MIT. Any notice of upcoming events not regularly scheduled, along with announcements for intramurals or varsity recruitment are welcomed. Simply drop off your announcement at The Tech office (room 483 of the Student Center) as far in advance as possible. Usually, each notice will be printed in the two issues immediately preceding the event.

If perhaps you were a bit confused by the picture of two persons portraying to be John Pearson '74 on last Friday's sports page of The Tech, do not be alarmed. I was also confused. As it happened, the photo was cropped to show only Pearson, but for some reason the printer chose to include Gary Wilkes, an excellent sprinter who unfortunately has never thrown the hammer. Well, be that as it may, Pearson, for those of you still wondering, was the one on the right, still smiling about his NCAA championship. Sorry about that.

With the coming of the fall sports season, The Tech sports staff is, as always, searching madly for people willing to cover one of the many sports abounding at the Institute. Experience is not necessary; one need only be able to spell and construct sentences with some regularity. Particularly needed are writers willing to cover baseball, sailing, and water polo; features writers are also in great demand. So, if you have even the slightest interest in associating yourself with our humble efforts, stop by The Tech office any time or give us a call at ext. 3-1541. We are desperate.
