A teacher in a New England boarding-school was requested by one of the girls to purchase, while shopping, Scott's Emulsion. Being of a literary turn of mind, and ignorant of its medicinal character, she inquired at a book store for it, — Scott's "Emulsion." Clerk was sorry, but had just sold the last copy; should he send out for it? Another dealer had the book, but in a set; couldn't break his sets of Scott's works. Farther search was vain, so the lady returned and reported to her pupil; after mutual explanations "the book" was obtained by one of the pupils at the nearest drug store. Further search was vain, so the lady returned and reported to her pupil; after mutual explanations "the book" was obtained at the nearest drug store.
