To the Class of '87,— Having just returned from Europe, where we have spent the summer in the study of art, as given in the extensive collections of the National Gallery, London, the Louvre and Luxembourg, Paris, and the high art centers in the different countries of the old world, we guarantee to our college and other school classes the full benefit of our observations,—made with the eagerness born of the professional artist's zeal,—and promise to give to each and all of those honoring us with their orders, perfect portraits, in part the result of the instruction gained personally by us from the words and works of the most eminent photographic artists on the other side.
