FALL RIVER LINE TO NEW YORK

Along the St. Lawrence.

All quiet along the St. Lawrence to-night,
Except now and then a cashier
Is seen, as he crosses, with grip-puck in hand,
And imagines a cop in the rear.
All quiet along the St. Lawrence to-night,
No sound save the rush of the water,
While amateur warriors, curled up in bed,
Are dreaming of horrible slaughter.

"All hail to this snow-covered alien shore,"
Quoth the boodler, disporting a plug;
"Far better the sweep of the boreal blast
Than a bed in the circumscribed jug."

"But, alas! for the fellows who lingered too late;
We think of 'em ever-with pain,
For they lost the rich spoils of municipal war,
By waiting too late for the train."

Was it the moonbeam so suddenly bright?
The starlight so won-derously lashing?

All quiet along the St. Lawrence to-night,
Though the cashier is crossing forever:
While depositors rush on the balk which he left,
He draws on the bank of the river.
