INCE our last remarks upon this subject, it is highly gratifying to all of us to note the renewed interest that has sprung up in football.

Over forty men are on the practice field daily, and much excellent material is being developed. The only subject for regret now appears to be that the same men do not turn up regularly, which means, of course, a loss in team-work training. It would have been better if this number had appeared five weeks ago, but it is by no means too late now. Such material as is being developed is never wasted—no one can tell when we may need it badly. Thanks to this improvement, we can confidently predict that we have seen our last defeat in this season's championship series, and that is by no means a record to be ashamed of, considering our early reverses.

We still feel called upon to condemn the small attendance at the game Saturday—there should have been three times as many present. But those who were there deserve the highest praise for the enthusiasm they displayed—the old Tech. cheer rang out clearer and louder than it has for many a day. And the plucky up-hill work of our crippled team was enough to rouse anyone to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

To pass from generalities to particularities, we wish to commend the action of two of our representative Tech. men, Messrs. Noblit and Andrews, in their efforts in coaching the football team.

These gentlemen, both of whom were seriously injured while playing, have let no opportunity pass to help the team in this way, and we only wish that their excellent example would be followed by other much older football men who are perfectly able to do so.

At all the other colleges, men who have played on their Varsity eleven never allow their interest in their representative team to lag, and after graduation continue to give the new players the vast benefit of their experience and advice.

With us it is sadly the reverse—once off our team, and we seldom or never see or hear of a player again, no matter how good his past record. And lacking a true coach, as we do, this loss is a keen one, which makes the praiseworthy efforts of the two gentlemen above referred to all the more apparent, as well as valuable.

Bulletin boards are an excellent institution when properly cared for and put to their proper uses. But the condition of the different Institute boards, both in the Engineering and Rogers buildings, is to be condemned.
