Evelynology Junior Week, with its list of events carefully planned and successfully carried through, is now well over, our friends have departed, and our college life has once again reverted to its ordinary routine of solid work in preparation for the Annuals. Never before has the number of enterprises been so large, nor has such general interest and co-operation been extended before by Faculty and by students alike. With scarcely an exception each occasion was successful to a degree almost unexpected, and each played well its part among the pleasant features of the week. Too much cannot be said in commendation of the work of those committees and individuals whose efforts were so thoroughly identified with the happy outcome of the period. Few have realized the immense amount of time and of devoted enthusiasm which have been necessary on the part of members of the several organizations in preparation for their respective undertakings.

To those who so kindly served as patronesses and as matrons at the Plays, the Prom., and the Editors’ Reception, the heartiest thanks and appreciation are extended. In very large measure the successful outcome of these affairs was due to their direct interest and substantial aid.

The Deutscher Verein was the first to appear before the Technology world of gaiety, in its play, “Er ist nicht eifersüchtig,” its Zwischenspiel, and the prelude to Nessler’s opera, “Der Trompeter von Säckingen.” The play itself, while showing a deal of careful work and bringing out a decided talent on the part of Mr. Kramer, perhaps failed to rouse the enthusiasm which was called forth by the second portion of the programme. The Zwischenspiel, by the Ninety-Six quartette, was certainly entertaining. The opera, a bold undertaking, was well carried through under the direction of Mr. Roeder.

Mrs. Walker’s reception to promenade guests on Tuesday afternoon was a highly pleasant affair, and added vastly to the enjoyment at the Junior Prom. in Pierce Hall in the evening. In the response to the call of its committee, Ninety-Six evinced a miserable spirit of apathy, and allowed the greater dependence to be placed upon the other classes. From a social standpoint, however, the affair proved to be all that could be desired. The hall was comfortably filled with representative Technology men and their friends, the catering was excellent, the music unsurpassed; in fact, the occasion was one of which Ninety-Six might well have been proud had sufficient support been rendered to warrant the name of Junior Promenade.
