THE renewal of the Harvard-Yale-Princeton Debates is viewed with much favor by the students of those colleges represented. These intercollegiate debates, it is believed, are of great value in developing latent forensic ability, and although not conducive to wild enthusiasm, it is possible that a victory in this field causes a feeling of pride as widespread as do our athletic triumphs.

We regret that no such training, the advantages of which are so obviously great, can be received in our college life. The Walker Club, to be sure, performs this function in part, but unfortunately confines its usefulness to the rather narrow limits of Course IX., the Department of General Studies.

While such societies as the Harvard Forum, for example, are perhaps more suited to academical training, we may hope that, as our college continues to broaden its intellectual horizon, the time may soon arrive when such an institution may not be out of place in Technology.

To those who have not yet explored the treasures of the new Public Library, and especially to those who take a more than superficial interest in its architecture and its decorations, we most cordially recommend the very complete and beautifully illustrated handbook recently published by Messrs. Curtis & Company, of this city.

LE MATIN.

O'er the summits rising,
With golden light baptizing,
Comes the glorious sun,
The mountain mist dispelling,
The noisy insects quelling,
And the night is done.

With gentle murmur whirring,
The drowsy leaflets stirring,
Breathes the zephyr clear,
Sweet thoughts of nature bringing,
The distant matins ringing,
And the dawn is here.

C. A. A. 46; Technology o.

The Chicago Athletic Association eleven completely outplayed the crippled eleven of Technology at the South End grounds last Tuesday. The game was not a very interesting one, owing to the fact that Technology played with but three regular men, Captain Manahan, Ulmer, and Mansfield, and so could furnish little opposition to the fierce attacks of the Chicago backs. With weak ends and three substitutes to the left of center, Technology's line gave no protection to the backs, and any semblance of interference on Tech's. part was broken up before the ball was really in play.

The Chicago men, on the other hand, played a clean, snappy game, and showed the effects of good training. Their interference was excellent and very fast, and Technology did not get the ball on downs during the entire game.

For the Technology team there is little to be said. The men all did their best and played hard, but were simply outclassed. Ulmer did not show up as well as usual, but this may have been due to the weakness on each side of him. Mansfield was not in his regular position of quarter back, and so cannot be criticised. Manahan may be said fairly to have played the only strong game on his eleven. He did well against a heavy team, and received little help from the guards.

As for the remaining eight men, they did their best, and for substitutes, and mostly inex-
