AFTER a long period of controversy, about which it is best to say as little as possible, a majority of the Sophomore Class has been able to unite and elect a President, and we trust that all personal feelings and prejudices will be put aside, and every one will now do his best to make the influence and spirit of 1901 felt in Class and Institute affairs. The time is fast approaching when it will be necessary for 1901 to come to the front and assume the leadership in college life. The Class will soon be called upon to elect a “Technique” Electoral Committee. Upon this committee devolves the responsibility of electing a “Technique” Board, and we wish to call attention to the necessity of electing a nominating body that shall be composed of representative men. Because a man is a jolly good fellow; because he has friends and admirers; because he is the leader of a powerful clique,—he is not, because of any one of these things, deserving of the honor conferred by an election to this Electoral Committee, unless he has shown that he has the moral courage to work for the best and higher interests of his class and college.

MEMORABLE event was commemorated last Saturday afternoon in Huntington Hall by the Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. This was the one hundred and twenty-ninth anniversary of the Boston Massacre.

To Bostonians, this event was formerly held as dear as the Fourth of July now is to the whole nation. For many years each anniversary was celebrated by patriotic speeches, only the most honored and brilliant men being invited to participate. But for some reason or other such exercises were discontinued, and for the past one hundred and sixteen years the anniversary has passed without general observance.

The celebration has been revived, however, in every particular, the orator on this latest occasion being no less than Dr. John Fiske, the foremost authority of the times on American History. The audience was highly appreciative of Dr. Fiske’s address, and was notable for the number of men and women prominent in all walks of life. Dr. Fiske reviewed the events leading up to and those immediately following the Boston Massacre; lack of space, however, prevents us from giv-
