H. W. TYLER.

Colonial Theatre.

No dramatic treat that the Colonial will present its patrons this season, can compare in interest with the engagement of Richard Mansfield, in his repertoire. Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," will be produced this evening, while "Ivan the Terrible," will be presented to-morrow night, and "Beau Brummel" Friday and Saturday nights.

Park Theatre.

"The Secret of Polichinelle," which delighted New Yorkers the greater part of last season, is being played at the Park this week, and Boston theatre-goers are now given a chance to see the newest importation from the Parisian stage. W. H. Thompson plays the leading part with exquisite effectiveness. W. J. Ferguson, Doria De Wolfe and several other favorites are included in the cast.

Hollis Street Theatre.

William Gillette has entered upon the last half of his engagement at the Hollis, and the audiences attracted by "The Admirable Crichton" are as brilliant as ever. The comedy shows Mr. Gillette at his best, and his company is excellent in every respect. The Boston success is fully duplicating those of New York and London.
