AT THE THEATRES.

Holit Street Theatre.

One week more remains of the engagement of Lulu Glaser's excellent company at the Hollis Street Theatre, where "Miss Dolly Dollars" has proved such a success that it has established Miss Glaser as one of the prime favorites of the theatre. She is jollier than ever, and her fund of good spirits is exactly suited to the character of the American heroines travelling abroad, and bothered nearly to death by importunate suitors of all nationalities who want her hand and her millions. The right lord gets both, thanks to the wealth of H. B. Smith, librettist, and Victor Herbert, composer, and "Miss Dolly Dollars" ends delightfully.

Park Theatre.

Bernard Shaw worshippers will be perfectly happy next week, for Arnold Daly and all his New York company of players will come to Boston to present "You Never Can Tell," which is well known as the biggest hit that this brilliant young actor has made in New York. Even "Candida" was eclipsed by this more recent production, which ran for many more weeks here in Boston, where the good will of H. B. Smith, librettist, and Victor Herbert, composer, and "Miss Dolly Dollars" ends delightfully.

Tremont Theatre.

The many people on the stage during the performance of "The County Chairman," which plays two more weeks at the Tremont Theatre, with Maryl Aronucle in the title role, do not merely form a back ground. They each represent a distinct village type, and many of them have important parts. George Ade was able to write a great play like "The County Chairman" because he was brought up in a little Middle Western village and knew just what he was talking about. "The County Chairman" ran for 213 performances in New York and 113 performances in Chicago, 5 weeks here in Boston, where it was the hit of the season, and has been pronounced by the press generally as the greatest American play of modern times.
