POETRY AS IT IS.

In a recent issue of Harper's Weekly, Professor Pearson of the English Department comments amusingly on poetry as he finds it understood and appreciated by the schoolboy. It is probable that some of the amusing incidents recited had their occurrence at Tech, and if such is the case it is not hard to see in a lyrical Tech Show a certain virtue as an educational force. Evidently some of the students used to have the music of poetry dinged into their ears until their view of what it is undergoes some slight change at least. The fact that poetry is held in light esteem by the student, and that he judges the position of all by his own standard is evident from a statement made by one, to the effect that "the more educated a people get the more they talk of science and business. They have no time to bother with poetry."
