SOCIAL EDUCATIONAL CONGRESS

The Social Educational Congress has just concluded its meetings in this city. Meetings were held on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday of last week. These were attended by famous educators from all over the country and many excellent addresses were made.

The Congress was called and supervised very largely by James P. Murrow, a well known member of the Corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The idea originated with the Social Education Club of Boston and it received the support and endorsement of all other educational organizations in this part of the country.

In recent educational development too much emphasis has been laid on purely vocational training, and making of the social organism, without making the soul the center of that family and of that organism, we should be weaving ropes of sand, and making ribbons of rainbows.
