HOLLS STREET THEATRE.

John Drew will have only one more week left of his engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre, where a delightful treat is being afforded to the lovers of the best in dramatic art by the presentation of "His House." In many respects this is the most effective Pucino play seen here in a long time, and it gives Mr. Drew splendid opportunities for artistic work, all of which he has improved.

The supporting company is the strongest that Charles Frohman has ever given him, and Margaret Minto and all the others share the honors.

PARK THEATRE.

Lulu Glaser will be at the Park Theatre next Monday evening, making her first appearance in "The Aero Club," a new comedy by Sydney Rosenfeld. It will be her initial experience here in anything but comic opera, and therefore it will be watched with an unusual amount of interest.

The fad of society for balloononing furnishes the basis for a capital comedy and Miss Glaser's character promises to be one of the brightest that she has ever had. Among the company secured by Klaw and Erlanger are Fritz Williams, Ottilia Culler, James Bradbury, Mrs. Annie Yeaman, Marion Abbott and Olive Wyndham.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

Distinguished theatrical visitors will come to Boston next Monday when Henry B. Irving will open his first engagement as a star at the Colonial Theatre. He will come here with his entire London company, including Dorothy Baird. For the first week of the stay here the bill will be the dual programme, "Markheim" and "Mauricette," and in the remainder of the engagement will be given a number of the plays given by the young actor's distinguished father, Sir Henry Irving. All these plays will be given with scenery and equipment brought from London.

Amarillo has arranged for dual outdoor track games with Prince Edward and the Carlisle Indians. The contests will take place in the latter part of April or early in May and will undoubtedly attract great interest. In recent years the Naval Academy men have been advancing rapidly in this niche of sports.

Mr. and Mrs. George P. Worcester of West Newton announce the engagement of their daughter, Grace Ambrose, to Edward Seaver, Jr., of Roxbury, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, 1907.
