PARK THEATRE.
Robert Edeson comes back to Boston for a farewell engagement in "Strongheart," and like all the others this one will be played at the Park Theatre. Mr. Edeson has the best picture of college life ever placed upon the stage and all Boston has gone enthusiastic over it. The central character is a young Indian, a famous football player, and in one of the scenes the audience gets all the excitement of a real game, for the action takes place in the quarters of the eleven just beside the gridiron.

COLONIAL THEATRE.
Fay Templeton is back again in Boston and at the Colonial Theatre she will show her charms in "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway," while all Boston will be started whistling "So Long, Mary," just as it was when she was here for the first time in this play. She is a prime favorite as a comedienne, and she has never had a success that fitted her better than this musical comedy by George M. Cohan. It is a lively work, and its slang and its music are quite enough to pack the Colonial.
