TECH WINS CHAMPIONSHIP.

lowing with the seventh game and set. Larned's consistent driving and placing gave him the second set.

The final match in the singles was by all odds the most interesting of the tournament. Larned was against Budlong of Brown, and the latter took advantage of every opportunity that his opponent allowed him.

Budlong's plan of campaign was to run his man, and try his patience and skill overhand, but it did not work. Larned would not stay back to run and what with his service and running in he put a block in front of his opponent that was effective.

Budlong put up a heady game, and with a realization of his opponent's weaknesses played to them persistently. His service to the far corners of Larned's forehand was quite effective, but Larned was too much for the Brown man, and even with his unsteadiness he had enough in store to win the last three sets handily.

Tech did not come into the doubles until the second day when the Institute pair walked off with matches against Dartmouth in the first round and Brown in the semifinals.

The final doubles was quite a match. The Tech pair showed themselves even stronger to the Amherst players. Larned was particularly good at the net and Coffin handled himself finely. The Amherst team's game was not even, brilliant work being followed by erratic strokes.

The summary for the Tech matches are:

CLUBS ENTERTAIN SENIORS.

On Saturday evening, the combined Glee, Banjo, and Mandolin Clubs gave a concert in Huntington Hall to a large and appreciative audience of seniors and their friends. The clubs gave an excellent program and did the best work of this year.

The program consisted of practically the same numbers that were presented at the spring concert, but were given with a much better vim and feeling that captured the audience. The "Yours," were Thompson, '23, with violin, Arthur Kilburn, in a very selection and Fales, '27 and Leslie Kilburn, '27, in a banjo duet.

Each of the clubs did excellent work, the Banjo Club being especially well-received. The "Italian War Dance" of the club made the hit of the evening, the yelling of a member of the audience giving greatly to the realistic effect of the selection.
