This is soon made up the deficiency of practical experience.

"Well this class can only provide for a very small part of the demands. The regular graduate is prepared to be of immediate practical usefulness for he has, as a rule, spent the greater part of his vacations in an architect’s office. His diploma stands, besides, for a school training in both the aesthetics and construction of architecture, and an all- round man he is always wanted. The demands for men from the Courses in Architectural Engineering are much greater than we can fill, and this demand seems also to increase annually.

"Generally the special student has had a first-rate training in office practice before coming to the Institute, in which he wishes to add the academic methods. He more often returns to the office from which he came than seeks a new one, but there are always enough opportunities for him, which may also be said of the undergraduate students. Architects are very willing and often anxious to have there in their offices during the summer time. They are able to make themselves useful in the regular office routine, and they will help fill the gaps occasioned by the vacations of the regular force.

"Never yet has there been any difficulty in finding positions for our men, nor has the department ever been able to graduate a number of students sufficient to meet the demand."
