CONCRETE CONSTRUCTION CHEATER

Wasson Tells Civic of New Process

I. C. Watson spoke to the Civil Engineering Society Wednesday afternoon on “Reinforced Concrete,” elucidating some of the practical considerations involved in the construction of reinforced concrete that are not to be found in handbook books.

Practice as well as theory is necessary to make concrete useful in buildings. While the dimensions, proportions, and specifications in which theory is laid down are accepted as rules of conduct. In order to save the expense of setting up new forms, it is customary to use the same columns for several stories in new buildings. While the theory of proportions is laid down in proportion to be carried, he cited Mr. Elmore’s concrete house as an example of the good results obtained by very practicable and expensive structures, including walls.

In Boston the building law requires as a large factor of safety that concrete is too expensive for use in buildings. The building law requires more than ten times heavier dosage than is normal in proportion to the load to be carried. He cited Mr. Elmore’s concrete house as an example of the good results obtained by very practicable and expensive structures.

PROJECTED HARE AND HOUNDS ASSOCIATION.

Excellent Plans Outlined by the Cross Country Captain.

(BY RISDALE ELLIS)

The control and running of the Cross Country teams by the Cross Country Association accords the medical department of the Cross Country Association. This Institution has then, the right to direct the manager and to exercise' over the team.

Now the election of the manager should of course lie with those who run the team’s expenses, that is, with the M. E. P. A. that M. E. P. A. or committee that runs and supports the team, and interest.

However, the Institution of not only cross-country running demands a distinct organization. The organization of the Cross Country Association with the Hare and Hounds Association, everything else, now comes under the Athletic Association. The same is almost as serious as in the case of the Hounds to-day, and that seemed to be a fact when the Hounds Club.

School of Arts of these rooms have been pointed on the general library cards in the respective buildings. It is at present the request of Professors that these rooms have been set aside for study.

KURIAL CLUBS AT WARESBURY.

Thursday evening, the Musical Club gave a concert at Warebury. From a musical point of view the performance was certainly satisfactory, as such this performance was only essentially limited to it.
