SENIOR ELECTIONS.
men on the committee has obscured the election of marshals. Then in the voting each man crossed off twenty-five men whom he wished as members of the committee, and had no means of showing who he wanted for marshals. In view of the peculiar circumstances the man who receives the greatest vote, is one who has offended few, whose name stands for a well-known name, and not for an individuality; in other words the great number of votes has a negative meaning. The man who is likely to win in such a contest is a man who has not pushed the class business he has had in hand vigorously, with personal initiative and judgment. The choosing of men other than the three highest by the committee throws too much responsibility on the committee. Many members of the committee feel that this should be done, others are against. The fact that the committee is divided on the subject is an argument against action by that body either way, for the reason that either action would destroy the organization and threaten the unanimity of action which is so essential for the conduct of the business of the committee. It would seem better, in view of the peculiar circumstances attendant on the election, together with the diverse views expressed by members of the committee and the class that the matter of marshals be referred to the class, to place the twenty-five men selected for the committee on a ballot on which each senior will vote for those men he wishes for marshals. This seems to be the fair method, the right method, the method that will prevent disorganization and wrangling in the committee, the method that seems to be universally advocated by the majority of the committee and the class.

COURSE II SENIORS GETS PERMIT.
Albert T. Seannel 1908, of Lowell, has secured a permit from the Lowell Water Board for Professor E. F. Miller, of the steam laboratories, with Institute students to make a test on the new Holly pump installed for the Lowell city water works. The pump is nearly ready for operation and the test will probably be run as a subject for a thesis.
