Last Meeting of Year Marked by Radical Departure

A large addition was made to the membership of the Institute Committee by the presentation of the course societies, and the heads of the various student societies, making the new committee total numbers of 25 in number.

The amendment to the constitution which changed the character of the committee was as follows: "The Committee shall consist of the Chair Committee and at least two persons to be elected from each class, together with the President of the professional society, the editor-in-chief of The Tech and Technics, the general managers of the Musical Clubs and Show, and members of the M. T. A., Y. M. C. A., and Speech.

The amendment was brought up by the discussion of man holding more than one major, other in student activities. A committee of the main body for some weeks has been discussing the question and securing opinions from representative men in student activities on the matter. The heads of some of these men were not exactly committed to this, and led, through their interest, to the suggestion that those men be made members of the Institute Committee ex-officio.

There was hardly a word said against the new scheme except that the committee would perhaps be too large to do efficient work. This led to the idea of splitting the committee into small committees, each one of which would take charge of a definite branch of work.

The representative character of the new committee is perhaps the greatest advantage which it has, while the energy of the various interests to be represented was the matter that caused several to comment, each new organization represented having definite ideas of what should or should not be done in undergraduate life and activities.

The matter of passing a rule on holding two dances was also laid on the table by the committee to be taken up next year by the body, there being a feeling to the effect that this question would receive better treatment by the body who were perhaps more intimately connected with the matter.

The action by the Institute Committee is regarded by those who know of the various bodies as one of the most important steps of the year taken by the body, and all agree that it will greatly aid in the solution of the various problems in student activities.

The plan suggested for actual working next year is, as has been said, the subdividing of the large committee into small sub-committees of five or six men each, under the hands of persons immediately in charge of the committee, the examinations and race meetings, office-holding and elections, etc. The sub-committees are to report probably to the large body at a meeting, and the committee are going to try to temper the sadness of the parting by introducing some "lively" when called upon by the President before the slogan: "Everybody that he has seen, no doubt.

The makeup of this new committee can best be gauged by looking over the bodies of men which would have formed the old form. On the committee are nineteen bodies, including the great increase in undergraduate bodies, making in all a body of 25 in number.

In 1905-1906, there would have been nine courses represented while in the juniors, and three each of the sophomore, junior, and senior classes; in 1907-1908, there would have been eleven courses represented while in the seniors, and three each of the sophomore, junior, and senior classes.

The makeup of the new committee is the wider representation by courses, bodies of men which would have formed the old form. On the committee are nineteen bodies, including the great increase in undergraduate bodies, making in all a body of 25 in number.

The new committee was in existence nine months when the previous boards as one of the most important steps ever taken by that body, there being a feeling to the effect that this question would receive better treatment by the body who were perhaps more intimately connected with the matter.

There was hardly a word said against the new scheme except that the committee would perhaps be too large to do efficient work. This led to the idea of splitting the committee into small committees, each one of which would take charge of a definite branch of work.

The representative character of the new committee is perhaps the greatest advantage which it has, while the energy of the various interests to be represented was the matter that caused several to comment, each new organization represented having definite ideas of what should or should not be done in undergraduate life and activities.

The matter of passing a rule on holding two dances was also laid on the table by the committee to be taken up next year by the body, there being a feeling to the effect that this question would receive better treatment by the body who were perhaps more intimately connected with the matter.

The action by the Institute Committee is regarded by those who know of the various bodies as one of the most important steps of the year taken by the body, and all agree that it will greatly aid in the solution of the various problems in student activities.

The plan suggested for actual working next year is, as has been said, the subdividing of the large committee into small sub-committees of five or six men each, under the hands of persons immediately in charge of the committee, the examinations and race meetings, office-holding and elections, etc. The sub-committees are to report probably to the large body at a meeting, and the committee are going to try to temper the sadness of the parting by introducing some "lively" when called upon by the President before the slogan: "Everybody that he has seen, no doubt.

The makeup of this new committee can best be gauged by looking over the bodies of men which would have formed the old form. On the committee are nineteen bodies, including the great increase in undergraduate bodies, making in all a body of 25 in number.

In 1905-1906, there would have been nine courses represented while in the juniors, and three each of the sophomore, junior, and senior classes; in 1907-1908, there would have been eleven courses represented while in the seniors, and three each of the sophomore, junior, and senior classes.

The makeup of the new committee is the wider representation by courses, bodies of men which would have formed the old form. On the committee are nineteen bodies, including the great increase in undergraduate bodies, making in all a body of 25 in number.

The new committee was in existence nine months when the previous boards as one of the most important steps ever taken by that body, there being a feeling to the effect that this question would receive better treatment by the body who were perhaps more intimately connected with the matter.

There was hardly a word said against the new scheme except that the committee would perhaps be too large to do efficient work. This led to the idea of splitting the committee into small committees, each one of which would take charge of a definite branch of work.

The representative character of the new committee is perhaps the greatest advantage which it has, while the energy of the various interests to be represented was the matter that caused several to comment, each new organization represented having definite ideas of what should or should not be done in undergraduate life and activities.

The matter of passing a rule on holding two dances was also laid on the table by the committee to be taken up next year by the body, there being a feeling to the effect that this question would receive better treatment by the body who were perhaps more intimately connected with the matter.

The action by the Institute Committee is regarded by those who know of the various bodies as one of the most important steps of the year taken by the body, and all agree that it will greatly aid in the solution of the various problems in student activities.

The plan suggested for actual working next year is, as has been said, the subdividing of the large committee into small sub-committees of five or six men each, under the hands of persons immediately in charge of the committee, the examinations and race meetings, office-holding and elections, etc. The sub-committees are to report probably to the large body at a meeting, and the committee are going to try to temper the sadness of the parting by introducing some "lively" when called upon by the President before the slogan: "Everybody that he has seen, no doubt.

The makeup of this new committee can best be gauged by looking over the bodies of men which would have formed the old form. On the committee are nineteen bodies, including the great increase in undergraduate bodies, making in all a body of 25 in number.

In 1905-1906, there would have been nine courses represented while in the juniors, and three each of the sophomore, junior, and senior classes; in 1907-1908, there would have been eleven courses represented while in the seniors, and three each of the sophomore, junior, and senior classes.

The makeup of the new committee is the wider representation by courses, bodies of men which would have formed the old form. On the committee are nineteen bodies, including the great increase in undergraduate bodies, making in all a body of 25 in number.