GOVERNOR FORBES

somehow and quickly, but now every thing is built in a permanent fashion to begin with. The result of this has been a marked economy. Mr. Forbes went on to show the spirit of the Filipinos in taking up the matter of road building. They even increased the taxes on themselves for these purposes.

He closed with a few words on the work Mr. Taft had done in the Islands, the serious problems he had faced and the difficulties he had overcome. He attributed the present state of the government and the co-operation of the natives to his influence and ability.

President Noyes dismissed the convocation with a few words on the torch-light procession which follow:

"I should not speak of this, were it not for serious conflict between our students and the police which took place on a similar occasion four years ago and about which certain incendiary articles have appeared recently in the newspapers. All I wish to do is to make known to you the fact that the trouble of four years ago started simply from one of those unfortunate misunderstandings which sometimes occur in spite of the best intentions on the part of everybody. The police had received orders from the Commissioner of Police, at the request of the Institute authorities, to keep the public off the Rogers steps, in order that the large audience which was attending a Lowell Institute lecture in Huntington Hall that evening might get out. It was not intended that this should apply to Institute students who might gather there after the hall was emptied and the procession was over; but this was not made clear to the police and unfortunately there was no opportunity to make the order itself known to the students. Consequently while on the one hand the students not unnaturally demanded access to their own steps, on the other hand, the police were merely obeying their orders in restraining them. The whole thing, as I say, was simply a misunderstanding. It is true that a few individual members of the police in executing the order used unwarrantable violence; but they were punished for this after a careful investigation; and it is to be remembered that though it is not an excuse it is at least an extenuation that they did this under conditions of great excitement and without any previous experience in dealing with a surging crowd of students. I therefore wish you to realize that there is not the least ground in the world for a feeling of antagonism on your part towards the police of this city; and to express the hope that in order to clearly show the public that you have no such feeling you will assist the police in maintaining the order which the citizens of a great city have a right to demand.

"Just one more word. Possibly you do not all know that the candidate for governor of the party in whose procession you are to march is a former student of the Institute and has been for years actively interested in its welfare. He counts on every Institute man to maintain the honor of his alma mater.

"Finally, let me tell you that you will find no obstacle to the use of Rogers steps tomorrow evening, and that you can gather there for cheering to your heart's content."

With a glare of torches and red fires all along the line and hundreds of transparencies, the parade was a pretty sight as it passed down Park street to Tremont, and then to Boylston. The bright caps and the no less gay regalia of the different clubs participating showed up well in the brilliant flickering light.

The Technology delegation made the most of the alliteration in the names of the candidate and the Institute, with transparencies upon which was written "Taft Tickles Tech," "Tech for Taft," "Taft and The Tech." A taxicab, in which were McMurtrie and Saul, vice-president and junior representative of the Technology Republican club, formed one of the principle ornaments of the procession.

Wagons followed the marchers into which, according to O'Meara's orders, all torches were to be put, arrangement being made to return the same in the morning.

Each man received instructions to remove cap and gown before leaving the line. The parade was well policed throughout its entire length.

HAPPINESS AT SMOKER

"How to be happy in one's profession" was the topic of the talk which Frank Chouteau Brown delivered at the Architectural Society smoker last night. At the outset he said that his subject was rather indefinite, but that he could best cover it by examples in his own work. The illustrations he gave were quite amusing and seemed to arouse great enthusiasm among the hearers.

Mr. Brown's talk was followed by a song by William B. Jenkins 1909, after which T. B. Atherton of the same class played a couple of selections on his violin. The next event on the program was hot-dog and beer which drowned-out the limerick strains coming from the piano.
