ENFORCEMENT OF PURE FOOD LAWS

A. G. Woodman Speaks Before Chemists on Government Work in this Line

FORTY CASES TRIED

Means Adapted by Manufacturers to Evade the Federal Government

Pure food laws were discussed in an interesting manner at a meeting of the Chemical Society, at which Mr. Woodman spoke first of the origin of the food laws. At first there were only state laws, which were so numerous as to be confusing. If a manufacturer wanted to carry his products to conform with the regulations of the different states, he would be required to have them passed by all the states they were to sell in. In some states the manufacturers were not required to carry out the law, and in others the enforcement of the law was in the hands of the local officials. The result was that the food in the different states was of poor quality, and many of the states had to be obliged to add, although their laws were obligatory, to add some sort of label to the food that was passed through the state.

The government has taken up the question of food laws, and has been successful in getting the manufacturers to conform with the laws. One bakery company advertising that their bread, pastry, etc., made with their product, will contain no salt, which is a false statement, has been compelled to add, on the label, that they contain no salt. Another bakery has been compelled to add, on the label, that they contain no salt. A third bakery has been compelled to add, on the label, that they contain no salt.

The many ways in which manufacturers attempt to evade the laws are surprising. One bakery company advertises that their bread, pastry, etc., made with their product, will contain no salt, which is a false statement. They have been compelled to add, on the label, that they contain no salt.

There is absolutely no need to go to the produce market to buy your bread, pastry, etc., made with their product, will contain no salt, which is a false statement. They have been compelled to add, on the label, that they contain no salt.

The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws. The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws. The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws. The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws. The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws. The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws. The government has received much criticism for its enforcement of the laws.

The data for the next meeting of the society have not yet been announced, but a good speaker is promised.