POINT SYSTEM COPIED

Phillips-Exeter Follows Tech in Limiting Office-Holding

At a recent meeting, the School Council of Phillips Exeter Academy adopted the following resolution:

RESOLVED, That the Student Council recommends that no one student should hold more than one major office in any one year.

The recommendation was passed with the expectation that the school as a whole will enter into the spirit and that public opinion would be sufficient to enforce it. It will be noticed that this is based on the same idea as the point system, established at Technology last fall, but does not reach so far a point.

LABORATORY CROWDED

Electrical Department Needs More Room for More Equipment

In spite of the ample scale of the accommodations originally provided to meet the needs of the classes in electrical engineering, the department is becoming quite cramped for a sufficient number of class rooms and for a proper amount of space in the laboratories. The present Electrical Engineering Laboratory is 274 feet in length, 40 feet in width, and every bit of available space is at present crowded, giving some idea of the necessity of the new laboratory which will have to be constructed when the Institute moves to a new site. The work on the Institute Spokesman of above is independent of and supplementary to that going on in the standardizing laboratory, high potential laboratory, laboratory of photography, etc., all of which are even more cramped for suitable room. The equipment, however, has advanced far ahead of the space provided and the department probably has the largest and most complete equipment of the machinery and instruments of any institution in the country, and in no case, annoyingly new innovations to this extensive collection.
