Charles M. Spofford is Appointed Hayward Professor in Civil Course

IS AT PRESENT AT BROOKLYN POLYTECHNIC

Charles M. Spofford has been appointed professor in civil engineering at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute.

Theodore Roosevelt Wins

Roosevelt defeated Bryan in the presidential election of 1904.

Rhode Island Wins

Providence, Feb. 27, 1900. — The State of Rhode Island won the game against Massachusetts by a score of 30-20.

Fencers Victors Again

Saturday, the Fencing Team defeated Penn, 3-0, with six out of seven matches being won.

Alumnus and Former Instructor at the Institute Will Assume Professorship at Opening of Next Year School

The Executive Committee of the Corporation at its stated meeting on Monday, February 10th, voted to appoint Professor Charles M. Spofford to the Hayward Professorship of Civil Engineering, which will become vacant at the beginning of the next academic year, through the resignation of Professor George F. Smith. The department of Civil and Engineering and Sanitary Engineering will be organized for the ensuing year upon the following basis: Professor Allen, Porter, Spofford and Robbins will be asked to take charge of the instruction in railroad engineering, hydraulic engineering, structural engineering, and topographical engineering, respectively. Professor Allen will be asked to act as administrative officer of the department in its general relations. Professor Spofford will act as representative of the course in Civil Engineering in its relations with the faculty and its students; and Professor Porter will act as representative of the course in Sanitary Engineering in similar relations.

Life of Prof. Spofford

Mr. Spofford has graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and immediately entered the practice of civil engineering.

Practical Experience

During the nine years that Mr. Spofford was with the firm of O. E. Sturtevant & Co., he was one of the heads of the firm in charge of the structural work of the company.

Theodore Roosevelt Wins

Theodore Roosevelt was re-elected for a second term in 1904.

Rhode Island Wins

Providence, Feb. 27, 1900. — The State of Rhode Island won the game against Massachusetts by a score of 30-20.