At the close of the concert, the men will march in a body down Boylston Street and cheer Rogers Building, which will be outlined in red fire. It is to Wednesday, the day of the stunts, that those who attended the reunion five years ago will look forward with the greatest anticipation. The trip down the harbor to Nantasket by two special steamers will be a delightful one, especially as the excursion will be enlivened by many unusual events which will be injected into the program from the time the expedition starts until it returns to Boston. The line-up on the beach on the arrival at Nantasket is one of the most impressive sights that a Tech man ever sees, and this year the entire length of the enormous beach will be hardly large enough to contain the members of Technology who shall foregather there under their class banners. To the music of military bands the procession will then march to the Atlantic House, where provision will be made to feed three thousand people in comfort. The luncheon five years ago was a very great success, because it was hot, well cooked, and served with no loss of time. Immediately after luncheon the classes from '68 to '09 will successively enter the arena and deliver themselves of the stunts that they are preparing for the edification of the elect. The presentations will run from the ludicrously grotesque to the grotesquely ludicrous, which, after all, is not very different, but it serves to convey the idea. The boats return to Boston at 4:30 o'clock. The culminating event of the entire Reunion will, of course, be the grand banquet at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening. The occasions are very rare when the management of Symphony Hall is willing to give up the regular concert for an affair of this kind. The hall will be impressively decorated for the occasion, and it is expected that over a thousand former students will be seated at the tables. The banquet committee proposes to serve a most delicious dinner, hot and tempting, from kitchens which will be erected in Syphony Hall for this occasion. The steward in charge has a well-earned reputation for dinners on unusual occasions, such as this, and every detail will be attended to with the utmost care. That there will be plenty of life at this banquet goes without saying. Great attention is being given to the after-dinner program, and arrangements are being made to secure speakers whom it will be a privilege to hear. For this reason it has been decided to open the galleries to guests who desire to hear the speeches and see what a great Technology banquet looks like. very complete. In fact, everything on the list of events is open to them except the day of the classes at Nahant on Tuesday afternoon and the jubilee smoker on Monday evening. On Tuesday afternoon Mrs. Edwin S. Webster will give the ladies a reception at her residence at Chestnut Hill. There will be a special committee of women, with headquarters in the Margaret Cheney Room, which is adjoining the Tech Union. Lack of accommodations forces the Alumni Association to issue its invitations to the senior class only. The invitation also includes all nongraduates of former years. The Association considers every man an alumnus who is entitled to regular or associate membership, graduate or non-graduate. At present a large number of returns from invitations are coming in with the acceptances in a majority, the acceptances noticeably coming from alumni not living near Boston.
