

WALKER CLUB SMOKER

tions have been sent out to all college graduates, but if by chance anyone has failed to receive one he should not hesitate to come as the invitation is general.

The Walker Club was founded with the purpose of promoting good fellowship and for the purpose of keeping up the interest of the members in other subjects than those dealt with by the Institute.

The club holds dinners during the year to which prominent doctors, lawyers, detectives, etc., are invited as speakers.

It is earnestly hoped that all old Walker Club men at the Institute will make an effort to be present.

interestingly, "The Conquest of the Air." An additional attraction will be the use of the stereopticon to illustrate the lecture.

It will be worth the while of all men to come next Friday, for the question is one of the most prominent before the scientific world today. Some Tech men have already interested themselves in this line, and they hope this lecture will cause a more wide spread interest.

A week from Friday Mr. Louis Brandeis will be the speaker. He addressed the students last year, and those who heard him considered him one of the most interesting speakers of the season. His subject on that date will be "Working Men's Life Insurance." Mr. Brandeis is prominent in the 1915 movement, and his remarks will be well worth hearing.

With the three most valuable world trophies for aeronautical skill in the possession of Americans, the prospects of aviation competitions during the next twelve months are of the brightest. The first step in the direction was taken Thursday, upon the arrival of Orville Wright from Europe, when it was semi-officially announced that a series of flights for the Michelin cup, won by Wilbur Wright at Le Mans, France, Dec. 31, 1908, would be held during the last week of this year, probably at the Belmont Park race track.

Andrew Carnegie has donated $100,000 to McGill University, following a promise that if $500,000 be raised from other sources, his own would become available. The $500,000 has been received from Lord Stratheona.
