

THE TECH, BOSTON, MASS., FRIDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1909.

DR. MACLAURIN'S REPORT

(Continued from page 1.)

Unfortunately the conditions under which the Public Lectures have been given, have not taken advantage of such opportunities as those that confront us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.

The Problem of New Location.

The problem of securing increased usefulness and broader usefulness is really one that confronts us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.

The Problem of New Location.

The problem of securing increased usefulness and broader usefulness is really one that confronts us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.

The Problem of New Location.

The problem of securing increased usefulness and broader usefulness is really one that confronts us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.

The Problem of New Location.

The problem of securing increased usefulness and broader usefulness is really one that confronts us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.

The Problem of New Location.

The problem of securing increased usefulness and broader usefulness is really one that confronts us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.

The Problem of New Location.

The problem of securing increased usefulness and broader usefulness is really one that confronts us. We must find a better location for the Institute. The need for a more convenient accommodation is so evident from the reports of Dr. Prichard, and others, that it seems unnecessary to insist upon it.