LECTURE ON VOLCANOES

Prof. Jaggard Will Speak On Recent Eruptions In Japan

Professor Thomas A. Jaggard, Jr., will lecture tonight in Huntington Hall on the subject of Japanese Volcanoes. Professor Jaggard is in charge of the Department of Geology here at the Institute. The lecture is scheduled to start promptly at eight o'clock. This is one of a course of lectures held here at the Institute and they form part of the regular course of educational work. As is well known, they are free to the public and all interested in any way are invited to join the Society under whose direction they are held. This is known as the Society of Arts of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

It was established many years ago by President Rogers, and aims to awaken and maintain an interest in the advances and applications of the sciences. Membership is open to any one interested in the Society, and he becomes a member upon payment of the annual dues of three dollars. President Maclaurin is head of the Society, and Mr. Litchfield is Secretary.

Professor Jaggard is very well informed on the subject of his address, for he spent the greater part of the spring of 1909 in Japan, where he investigated the work of the government experts on earthquakes. He also visited several active volcanoes. During the summer he was fortunate to secure several beautiful and interesting pictures, which he will show tonight.

Perhaps the most interesting subject which he will take up is the eruption of the remarkable mountain, named Tarumai, in Yezo, the northern island of Japan. It broke out in eruption a short time before Dr. Jaggard's arrival. He was able to visit the mountain and will exhibit a remarkable series of photographs of the wonderful lava dome which rose in the midst of the crater.

Last year Dr. Jaggard spoke before the Society about the Messina earthquake, and all who heard him, considered themselves most fortunate. Tonight's address should prove equally interesting.
