for the last few years it has been customary for the Senior Class to present to the Institute some gift by which it may be remembered. The gift of last year’s class was four handsome derricks for the Living Room, the Class Gift, after considering very carefully the needs of the Institute. It was decided upon a piece of apparatus of modern type, with the most approved attachments. With these subjects it is hoped that the Friday evening entertainments will prove more popular.

Therefore, on behalf of the Class of 1910 it gives its pleasure to announce to the friends of the Institute that this year the Senior Class presents the Technology Union with a stereopticon lantern.

After the end of the last speech the Sophomores and their guests adjourned to the lawn where the class spread was enjoyed by the graduating students. The party broke up at 3 P. M., amid cheers and handshakes the guests departed.

It is a joy to show you just what the Institute can turn out in the line of an engineer. Miss Helen Fales pleasure do me the honor to come and stand by my side. Helen, dear, I know that you appear lonely as you are coming up here by yourself, and so I think that I had better summon your associates to help you out. Mr. Jenckes, will you please come and assist you.

"Ladies and gentlemen, here you see before you two kindred spirits—they work together—they play together—they cook together and new together.

"I present to you this lovely couple, you should stand in chemical laboratory some morning when they need help. The conversation goes something like this:

"Hi—Greeingles, Edgie."

"Hi—Oh, you kid!"

"Did you study your phenolphthalein last night?"

"Yes—Oh, I am working it out.

"Mr. Jenckes, we all think you have done very well to keep up in your studies and at the same time to keep up in this athletic work, and as a present from your classmates, we want you to take this sparkler, and when you have the courage or the nerve, see if you can't persuade Helen—Oh, you have to accept it. You may be saved.

"Mr. Jenckes, as I must take a train for Chicago to-morrow, I suggest that you accept the gift with the class, a combination reflectoscope and stereopticon. Mr. Reynolds speech was as follows:
