TODAY the freshmen start their life as a class at the Institute. Of course the freshman-sophomore idea has not as yet faded out, and a few will think it devolves upon them to be as disagreeable as they can. But the custom is not short-lived, and as it has and is doing not in other upper-date institutions, it is doing here. This occasion met at all the plans for any one of the classes. The time for this has been set aside for Field Day when the field-and-square idea of equal sides and equal distances around the field is given closest o what is in these.

Why not be the start of the idea of a class life? Who has ever relished these childish antics that bring no one of the support
