The dinner was held at the Minneola Restaurant, where the Aero Club has its regular meetings. The food was excellent, and the company wasspirited. The speeches were made in turn, and each one was listened to with great interest. Mr. Lehman's speech was especially interesting, as he described the machines and flying ground in the country. There are several Curtis machines, an Annette and a Mitchell. He also told of some of the difficulties in building a good machine.

When the dinner is over, the members of the Aero Club will gather together to discuss the day's events. They will exchange information on the latest developments in aviation, and perhaps even plan a project of their own. The Aero Club is an active and enthusiastic group, and it is certain that their enthusiasm will carry them far in their pursuit of this exciting new sport.
