An entertaining evening assured.

That the smoker of the Biological Society which is to be held in the Union Wednesday evening will be an entertaining evening is assured by the committee in charge of arrangements for that meeting. The conference between the two issuing parties in England has finally come to an end, unfortunately, without any agreement. The present conditions of the legislative affairs is almost precisely the same as it was last spring. The issues in brief this: Shall the House of Lords be reconstructed, or shall it be done away with entirely? If it is to be reconstructed, how is this be brought about, and how shall the line be drawn that is to limit its power? It was shown in the last by-elections that the opposition of the majority of the people of England is distinctly against the continued existence of the House of Lords. The steps to be taken were recommended by the joint committee which has just finished its report and any kind of reach is this. The simple shows that neither of the two great political parties is willing to sacrifice any part of its policies in order to bring about a compromise, and it will be the submitting of the entire question to the House of Commons where it will be debated.

It is hazardous to attempt any forecast. The Radicals, and they are not represented in the manner of the great total abolition of the House of Lords.

By far the greater number of people, it would seem, however, desire only reorganization, for they feel that the House of Lords will exert a much greater influence in the future than it has in the past. The political crisis in England is fast approaching a climax, and the political parties are preparing their machinery for the campaign which now seems inevitable.
