ed data on mines which had failed. The last issue Mr. Livermore had seen at the Telluride Mining camp, where he was employed as a local mining engineer. He went very deeply into the details of his method of mining at this place. Many men were employed in the mining operations, and the only trouble was that the ore was taken out for a longer time. In this way, he said, the mining companies were able to increase the output of ore and give the miners a chance to become the managers of the mines. Replacements were needed in the mining camps, and the members who were sent to the mining fields would probably be the last of the year.
