NEW SITE DEBATE.

Cambridge Site Favored By Men Acting as the Judges.

A debate on the new site was held in Walker 23, at 11 P.M. Saturday. It was conducted under the direction of Mr. Sydney Owen, the instructor of English, who takes charge of all men from E to F. The two teams debating the chances of the Cambridge (the case 5) by a unanimous verdict of the entire section.

The affirmative was represented by Schlegel and Harding; the negative was represented by Freeman and Keeney. At 11 P.M. Mr. Guss stated after the debate that the arguments presented were very good, and he thought that this debate, and the results thereof, should be conclusive.

Mr. Harding, the first speaker, pointed out the fact that a new site was absolutely necessary in order that the Institute may be considered from a business basis. He further showed that the new site was the best, under the circumstances, both because of its location and its size. The second affirmative, Mr. Harding, spoke of the benefit to the students and the faculty. He stated that the placing of the Institute in Cambridge would greatly facilitate the absorbing of Harvard by Tech, if such a thing were to come about.

Mr. Freeman, the first speaker on the negative, argued that since the new site was to be in a manufacturing city, and since the new location was actually surrounded by factories, the efficiency of the school would be hampered by the necessary disturbances which would result.

Mr. Keeney, the second negative, argued that a site should have been chosen which was larger and which would show the buildings off much better. Despite the arguments of the first affirmative speaker, that the Institute was a part of and located in Boston, or near enough to be called
