BEALE ON "NEW SITE."

I first came to Cambridge (he is a Harvard man) that land was only mud-flats and ponds. The city began to fill in this really waste land, but when the job had been completed and the Charles River Embankment Company started its development, the city had restrictions placed on the kind and value of the buildings. Only dwelling houses may be erected and they must cost $6000 exclusive of the cost of land. If they are apartment houses the cost must be at least $8000 per apartment. Furthermore, no livery or building of mechanical construction can be erected. Not only this, but they are limited as to height. The reasons that these restrictions are really prohibitive are the following, as outlined by Mr. Beal. In the first place there are factories on two sides of the plot. This would probably drive away people who would be willing to pay the same amount that the city demands the buildings shall meet, as people able to pay that much would prefer a location less commercial in aspect and surroundings. This would leave the persons most likely to desire residence there to the operative and mechanic factories. But it is most probable that these men would be unable to spend the required amount on building a house as their incomes are in general too small. This leaves the population of that land still unsettled, although desired by the city with its great restrictions. The first failure of the Riverbank enterprise was cited by Mr. Beal as a possible example:

"For the site some population is needed that will center about it, some such that not too many outside daily trips in rush hours need be taken. The institute is an ideal re-utilization of this centered population." Besides this the site will make a fine approach to the city and be a development of the waterfront for all time. These advantages to Cambridge have been previously cited, but there are many cases, as suggested by President Macarius, desire advice on professional subjects. The department heads of the institute will in many cases be glad to assist the Cambridge men as they have the Boston men in the past. If the committee decides to report tomorrow, Tuesday evening will see the issue of the new site definitely settled.

W. D. Crowell, general manager of the Queen Aeroplane Company, New York city, and Robert Yates of Parsons, N. J., have been at Wrecker Polytechnic Institute over the number of aeroplane propeller tests conducted by Professor D. La Gallup.

PLAN FOR RECEPTION.

Rev. Dr. Mann to Be Host of Tech Brotherhood Wed. Eve.

On Wednesday evening a dinner was held at the Tech Club by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew. Final plans were made as to the reception to be given at the new Trinity Parish House on James avenue. The reception is to be held on Wednesday evening, December 6, and will start at 8 o'clock. It is to be entirely informal. Refreshments will be served to all and a most enjoyable time is promised. Everyone is invited. Invitation cards are to be sent to all the men whose names the Brotherhood have now; but it is to be distinctly understood that all men in any way connected with the Episcopal church are cordially invited, whether they receive cards or not. The Rev. Dr. Mann will be the host, and he will probably say a few words of welcome in behalf of Trinity Church.
