Fitzgerald Talks to Public Speakers

Success in Engineering Work Depends Much Upon Cheerfulness

Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald's remarks to Public Speaking Monopoly were greatly appreciated by members of the section and by the few others who found it possible to attend. He spoke of his early experiences as an engineer, and of the qualities necessary for success in the profession. The engineer, said Mr. Fitzgerald, most frequently to be thrall to his college, he might be different from Mr. Fitzgerald. He thought particularly likely to be the case in municipal work. One of the chief personal qualities required for such conditions is cheerfulness. The speech was enriched with personal experience, and gave considerable insight into that important part of the engineer's work which consists in dealing with men.
