MECHANICS' BANQUET.
Some of the best engineers in the City will Speak.

The Mechanical Engineering Society has secured a number of well-known men to speak at its annual banquet to be held next Tuesday evening, March 19, at the Boston City Club on Beacon street. Among them are: Ralph E. Curtiss, secretary of the Boston section of the A. M. E., and head designer of the Boston Edison Company; Professor J. N. Hopwood, head of the Mechanical Engineering Department of Harvard; Henry Bartlett, mechanical superintendent of the Boston and Maine Railway; Richard H. Rice, mechanical engineer for the General Electric Company, and Professor E. F. Millin, president of the Boston branch of the A. M. E.

All courses II men are invited to go, whether or not members of the society, and tickets may be obtained from any officer of the society.

Supplies bought | 1,236.63

Profit | $99.01

March 13, 1912.

There are assets, viz.: Unaccounted for $168.57; Tech Union stationary on hand, which is being sold daily, amounting to $100.99.

It should be borne in mind that in making up the above figures no account has been taken of overhead charges, such as rent, water, heat, electricity, etc., which it would be perfectly proper for the Institute to charge to the Union, and which would greatly more than wipe out this profit.

It should be also borne in mind that it is necessary during the summer to make repairs to the range, kettles, etc., as they wished, but feel that the general student body should make repairs or charge accounts.
