One of the most interesting and inspiring talks that has ever been heard by any professional society at the University is that which Mr. H. W. Gibson gave before the Architectural Engineering Society of Harvard. Mr. Gibson is the Master Builder of St. Bride's in London. The essence of the talk was the setting forth of a way out of the labor chaos which is besetting the American nation at the present time.

Mr. Gibson is a man eminently well fitted to discuss such a subject by reason of his extremely close contact with various labor conditions, both in actual contracting business and in his relations, comparatively new and highly successful, with the incorporated union which he has founded in many trades here in Boston.

Owing to the fact that the idea seems to be so prevalent that there is so much ready-made prejudice against any conceivable extent, he cited the general thought of the Labor Board after the strike in the Duluth lead mines, an anarcho-syndicalist, a representative of labor unions, and a syndicalist. The last two, in his opinion, are the real employers and not the contractors, for it is they who must ultimately pay for the various fluctuations in the cost of production and it is the contractors who are merely the agents; he said that the least of the labor troubles rests with the contractors.

With this point firmly established he explained that the people them-selves are the real employers and not the contractors, for it is they who must ultimately pay for the various fluctuations in the cost of production and it is the contractors who are merely the agents; he said that the least of the labor troubles rests with the contractors.

Mr. Gibson talked of the extent, he cited the general thought of the Labor Board after the strike in the Duluth lead mines, an anarcho-syndicalist, a representative of labor unions, and a syndicalist. The last two, in his opinion, are the real employers and not the contractors, for it is they who must ultimately pay for the various fluctuations in the cost of production and it is the contractors who are merely the agents; he said that the least of the labor troubles rests with the contractors.

The assortment is complete and wonderfully Varied.

WRESTLING MEET (Continued from Page 2, Col. 1.)

The Freshman basketball team has had quite a successful season to date, and with the best part of its schedule ahead of it, is showing every evidence of being a team that probably wind up the season with a fairly good record. Yesterday afternoon a hard scrimmage was held with both pitcher teams from the upper classes, and the Freshmen outplayed their opponents in every department. The game was twice as much points to their credit as their opponents.

Captain Dewson, who plays center for the Freshmen, is a good man in his position, and there are few men his equal among the attacking ranks. The Freshmen are playing very well and is always to be found in the thick of the game. For instance, Mr. and Mrs. Dewson are on the court in the forward positions, and seem to have an eye for the basket as well as the ability to play a good offensive game.

Manager Jenabian has one or two games yet under consideration. It is hoped that the team will be able to play the Cunningham Gym at 11:15 on March 1. This team has made a record for itself this season and everyone expects a home. The Freshmen will probably be playing their best with a very interesting game and certainly the game for the fun.

A series of three games is being arranged with Sproles to take place in the near future. These games will complete the schedule.

A fund has been raised by the friends of the university to establish a Harvard alumni Engraving. This is the first course of its kind to be established in any American university.

Do you patronize our advertisers?