The suspense is awful.

NEW COURSES OPEN
Boston School Offers Opportunity in Foreign Languages.

Special courses in Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian, designed to be of practical and immediate value to those who intend to enter into the commercial life of the countries where these languages are spoken, or to those intending to use these languages in business here in America, are being offered in the continuation school of the city of Boston. The latter classes are to be held on 45 Boylston street, and will provide free instruction to any who desire such knowledge.

Instruction is given by native teachers, who thoroughly understand what a practical working knowledge of languages is. Those classes are designed to supplement any that are given at the institute, and can be of great service in as much as special attention is given to a careful training of the ear. The latter classes have been in existence since December, but pupils having had the advantage of the language may be admitted. Applications should be made at the office of the principal.
